SCOW (AP) — President Clinton Wednesday greeted the Prime Minister of Jordan, King Hussein, at the airport. The 15th Jordanian King, who is 75, was accompanied by his wife, Queen Noor, and their four children. The King and Queen were greeted by Jordanian officials and then by Clinton. The President and the King shared a warm embrace. Clinton said he was "greatly appreciative" of the Jordanian government's contribution to the peace process. He also wished the King and Queen a happy birthday. The King thanked Clinton for his support and wished him a successful trip to the Middle East. The King and Queen then boarded their plane for Amman. Clinton will be in Amman for the day, where he will meet with Jordanian officials and the Prime Minister, Nasser Lawzi. Clinton is expected to leave Amman for Jerusalem on Friday.

Jordan thanks Kuwait for release of prisoners
Amman (R) — Acting Minister of Information Nasser Lawzi thanked Kuwait on Saturday for releasing six Jordanians held in the emirate since the 1990-91 Gulf crisis. Mr. Lawzi said Jordan was also looking forward to the release of a further seven detainees who were granted amnesty last month by Kuwait's Emir Sheikh Jaber Al Ahmad Al Sabah. All 13 had been jailed on charges of collaborating with Iraq which invaded the emirate in 1990. "The Jordanian government thanks the Kuwaiti government... for this initiative. We look forward to the continuation of measures related to the release of the rest of this group," Mr. Lawzi said.

Annan makes unscheduled landing in Sudan
KHARTOUM (AFP) — Bad weather forced the plane carrying U.N. Secretary General Kofi Annan to make an unscheduled landing in Khartoum on Saturday. Mr. Annan was on a flight from Kampala, the capital of Uganda, to Asmara, the capital of Eritrea, the last stage of his eight-nation African tour.

Suspects in car explosions under arrest

Lawzi expected to reveal identity of 'Islamist group' today

By Tareq Ayyoub
Special to the Jordan Times
AMMAN — The security forces have arrested those responsible for a series of car explosions in Amman in the past two weeks, a senior government official said Saturday.
The official, who asked not to be identified, declined to name the alleged perpetrators or disclose their number. Tens of suspects, believed to be linked to these attacks, were arrested by the authorities in the past week.
The official confirmed a report that was published in the Arabic daily, Al Arab Al Yawm, which said that those involved in the attacks are part of a "group with Islamist affiliation." The official declined to reveal further details.
Acting Minister of Information Nasser Lawzi is expected to announce the names and identities of the suspects at a press conference today.
Mr. Lawzi told reporters following the weekly Cabinet session that the investigation into the case has reached an "advanced stage."
The minister said that tens of people were arrested "during the organised campaign by the concerned security agencies."
He added that "details on the group, its affiliation and the names of its members will be announced in the near future and when the investigation is over."
Last month, a car exploded at the parking lot of the Jerusalem International Hotel and several others at the headquarters of the police highway patrols.
A previously unknown group, Abu Thar Al Ghafari, claimed, in a statement issued in Beirut, the responsibility for the explosion at the Jerusalem International Hotel.
The government doubted the statement and said that it lacked accuracy.
In additional attacks, the house of the director of the Royal Medical Services, Major General Yousif Al Gassous, was sprayed by several bullets earlier this month, and a fire bomb burnt down the car that belonged to the former head of the General Intelligence Department, Mohammad Rasoul Kilani. Another bomb was placed in the garbage container in front of the house of former minister of interior, Jawdat Shoul.
Unconfirmed reports said that the residence of Brigadier General Ma'moun Khasawneh, who presided on the case of Ahmad Dakamseh, a soldier who killed seven Israeli schoolgirls in March 1997, was also attacked.
None of the explosions or attacks resulted in loss of life or injury.

Mr. Hikmat, a lawyer with over 35 years of experience, was born in Ma'an in 1941 and graduated from Damascus University with a law degree in 1960. Among the portfolios he held were the ministries of Youth and Culture, Transportation, and most recently, Justice. Mr. Hikmat also headed the Senate's Legal Committee. ## Washington summit postponed

Ross: Difficult to overcome the differences that remain

TEL AVIV (R) — The U.S. special envoy to the Middle East, Dennis Ross, met Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu late on Saturday, hoping to achieve a breakthrough that might clear the way for a summit in Washington soon.
The two met several hours after a senior U.S. official speaking in the United States said a summit would not take place in Washington on Monday as originally proposed, but that President Bill Clinton was trying to reschedule one for later this month.
Mr. Ross had said earlier on Saturday it would be hard to overcome difficulties in time for a Monday summit, but would pursue efforts to produce a breakthrough.
He said Mr. Clinton and Secretary of State Madeleine Albright had sent him back to the region at Mr. Netanyahu's request in order "to come and work on the differences that remain with an eye towards overcoming them so that we can convene the summit in Washington."
"The differences that remain are not large. There clearly are difficulties. At this point the differences that remain are difficult to overcome," Mr. Ross told reporters in the West Bank city of Ramallah after meeting Palestinian President Yasser Arafat.
Mr. Ross told Mr. Arafat the Israelis had asked to postpone Monday's summit a few days. Palestinian National Authority (PNA) officials said. The officials said they thought a Monday meeting in Washington would be highly unlikely if Mr. Ross failed to persuade Mr. Netanyahu to accept U.S. proposals on taking the peace process forward.
"Arafat told (Ross) he was prepared to leave for Washington and attend the meeting on Monday as planned. But if Ross failed to reach an agreement with the Israelis, the Palestinians would have no choice but to accept the delay," a senior PNA official told Reuters.
Mr. Netanyahu's spokesman David Bar-Ilan said on Friday Israel did not plan to attend Washington's proposed summit on Monday.
"The time is so short that by now it would be quite impossible that an agreement will be reached on Sunday, meaning that we will not be in Washington on Monday," he told Reuters.

Sahhaf in Amman to request help in lifting sanctions

By Tareq Ayyoub
Special to the Jordan Times
AMMAN — Iraqi Foreign Minister Mohammad Sahhaf arrived here late Saturday to deliver a message from Iraqi President Saddam Hussein to His Majesty King Hussein.
Acting Information Minister Nasser Lawzi told reporters following the weekly regular Cabinet session that Mr. Sahhaf's mission was part of an Iraqi campaign to urge Arab states and U.N. Security Council members to help lift the seven-year-old sanctions.
A Foreign Ministry official told the Jordan Times that Mr. Sahhaf will meet with Prime Minister Abdul Salam Majali and Acting Foreign Minister Talal Sati' al-Husseini.
The official, who asked not to be named, also said that the Iraqi minister will also hold a meeting with members of parliament prior to his meeting with King Hussein.
Mr. Lawzi said that it was premature to say what issues the Iraqi official will raise during his talks in Amman.
Last month, the Security Council decided to renew the sanctions on Iraq to the dismay of the country's leadership.
Mr. Sahhaf, who attended the Security Council debate last month, is expected to visit Egypt and other Arab states following his three-day visit to the Kingdom.
Iraqi Deputy Prime Minister Tareq Aziz is also expected here en route to France, where he will meet with French President Jacques Chirac.
Mr. Aziz is also expected to visit other European countries to explain Iraq's position regarding the renewal of U.N. sanctions, which has left more than 600,000 children dead according to Iraqi official figures.
Mr. Lawzi said that Mr. Aziz would not meet with Jordanian officials while in Amman.
Meanwhile, a government-sponsored humanitarian aid campaign is destined for Baghdad with several tonnes of medicine.
Arabic local newspapers said that the Jordanian delegation, to leave later this month, will be headed by Minister of Health and Medical Care Ashraf Kurdi.

Annan: U.N. troops will ensure security at Lebanon, Israel border

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — U.N. peacekeeping troops would ensure that Lebanese troops secure Lebanon's border with Israel once Israeli troops withdraw, U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan said Friday.
Israel last month formally accepted a U.N. Security Council resolution that calls for an Israeli troop withdrawal from south Lebanon.
"The resolution calls for the withdrawal of Israeli troops from south Lebanon and we at the United Nations, working with the parties, would also ensure that the Lebanese authorities expand, take over the matters (of) safety and security," Mr. Annan said from Kampala, Uganda.
Mr. Annan talked by satellite from Kampala, Uganda on a CNN forum with international journalists.
Israel once wanted a peace treaty in exchange for withdrawing, but after Mr. Annan visited the region it dropped that condition.
It said its only remaining condition is that Lebanese forces take Israel's place to prevent attacks on the Jewish state from the Hizbollah.
Lebanon rejects any conditions, saying the U.N. resolution is unequivocal in its call for a withdrawal. Mr. Annan did not say whether the Lebanese had agreed to work with the United Nations to secure the area.

Israeli opposition backs Hillary on Palestinian right to statehood

TEL AVIV (AFP) — The Israeli Left launched a vigorous defence of U.S. First Lady Hillary Clinton Saturday against critics of her remarks about the desirability of a Palestinian state.
"You should know that a very large section of Israeli public opinion considers there will be a Palestinian state sooner or later and that the creation of such a state is indispensable to bring about peace," the leader of the dovish Meretz party wrote in a letter of support to the first lady.
Criticism of her remarks came only from "ruling politicians who are stuck in the past," Mr. Sarid wrote.
His comments echoed remarks made in support of a Palestinian state earlier this week by former Labour Prime Minister Shimon Peres.
Current Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu refrained from criticising the first lady's comments when challenged about them in a television interview earlier this week.
"It is no secret that I oppose a Palestinian state... It is equally naturally perfectly possible that people in Washington... might have a different view," he said.
But his spokesman David Bar-Ilan took a much stronger line the following day. "We are outraged — on the one hand the Americans say they do not support the creation of a Palestinian state, on the other hand, the wife of the president, who is not any old person, says she is in favour," he said.
"I think that it will be in the long-term interest of the Middle East for Palestine to be a state," the first lady had told Arab and Israeli students in a live satellite link with a "Seeds of Peace" meeting in Switzerland Wednesday.
Recent opinion polls suggest most Israeli Jews are resigned to international recognition of a Palestinian state even if they do not welcome it.

Arafat: EU has new initiative

ABU DHABI (AFP) — The European Union (EU) has presented new proposals to relaunch the stalled Middle East peace process but has been asked by the United States to sit on them, Palestinian President Yasser Arafat said Saturday.
"There is a European initiative, of which we have been informed generally without details," Mr. Arafat told the United Arab Emirates daily Al Khaleej.
"The U.S. has asked the EU to postpone the announcement of that initiative so it will push its own. It has not been announced but it is not bad."
The U.S. proposals call for an Israeli withdrawal from 13.1 per cent of the West Bank as part of the 1994 autonomy deal with the Palestinians.
Palestinian National Authority has accepted the proposals but they have been rejected by Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu.
The Israeli and Palestinian leaders failed to reach agreement at meetings in London last week, prompting the U.S. to call for fresh talks in Washington on Monday. U.S. envoy Dennis Ross is due to meet Mr. Arafat and Netanyahu.
Mr. Arafat said the U.S. initiative includes an Israeli withdrawal under the supervision of a joint U.S.-Israeli-Palestinian committee. He said more withdrawals would take place as part of the Oslo self-rule accords.
"The proposed pullout is just for now and this percentage is aimed at persuading the Israelis to agree... The percentage will be compensated for in the third stage [of the Oslo agreement]," he said.
He warned that Monday's talks could produce nothing because "Netanyahu is adopting an intransigent position and he opposes the whole autonomy accord."
Asked about his reaction if the three-way Washington summit fails, he said: "All options are open for the Palestinian people."
Mr. Arafat reiterated his intention to declare a Palestinian state on May 4 next year despite Israeli threats. "On that date, the transitional phase of the Oslo agreement ends, so it will be our right to declare an independent Palestinian state."

Lebanese army intervenes after rival Shiite groups wound two people

BEIRUT (AP) — Troops intervened after a shoot-out between rival Shiite Muslim groups wounded two persons in Lebanon's capital on Friday night.

A statement issued by the Lebanese army said rivalry between the two groups, Hizbollah and Amal, degenerated into shooting at 8 p.m. in the districts of Khandaq Al Gharni and Zukak Bullat.

The two groups, who are contesting staggered local elections that begin May 24, both have members of parliament and guerrilla factions.

Two people were wounded, the army said. Soldiers restored order and raided nearby houses in search of gunmen, the statement added.

Gunfights in the street, a hallmark of Lebanon's civil war of 1975-90, have been rare since the army fanned out across the country at the end of the war and militias were disarmed and disbanded.

The army's swift action Friday suggests the government is determined to make sure the lawlessness of the war does not return.

Hizbollah and the more moderate Amal vie for the support of Lebanon's 1.2 million Shiites, the largest sect. The leader of Amal is the parliamentary speaker, Nabih Berri.

After the war, the two groups were allowed to retain their weapons on the understanding they would use them to fight Israeli forces in the zone that Israel occupies in southern Lebanon.

20 wounded in Algerian attack

ALGIERS (AFP) — Twenty people have been wounded, three seriously, in a bomb blast west of the Algerian capital, newspaper reports said Saturday.

The attack took place Wednesday at Hadjout, the privately owned papers said, adding that a second bomb exploded a short time later without causing any casualties.

In separate incidents over the last few days, at least 10 armed Islamists were killed by security forces at Tlemcen, Tizi-Ouzou, Boumerdes and Al Affroun. Papers gave different tolls for the clashes. Islamists launched an insurgency in Algeria after the January 1992 cancellation of general elections the now outlawed Islamic Salvation Front (FIS) was poised to win.

Western and humanitarian sources estimate the subsequent violence has claimed some 70,000 lives.

UAE set to buy 80 U.S. fighter jets in deal worth up to $8 billion

ABU DHABI (AFP) — The United Arab Emirates is set to announce next week an order worth up to $8 billion for 80 fighter jets from U.S. defence giant Lockheed Martin, UAE officials and diplomats here said Saturday.

The U.S. order, worth between $6 billion and $8 billion, will more than double the size of the UAE's air force, which consists mainly of French and British fighters.

Sheikh Khalifa, deputy commander of the armed forces, is due to meet U.S. President Bill Clinton on Tuesday but UAE officials said the fighter deal was unlikely to be signed during his three-day visit as final details would have to be worked out.

His brother, army chief of staff Sheikh Mohammad Bin Zayed Al Nahayan, is to accompany him on the trip. Sheikh Mohammad, who is in charge of Abu Dhabi's military procurements, has visited Washington at least twice over the past year to discuss the fighter deal.

Lockheed's two other rivals were the French Dassault's Rafale and the Eurofighter, which is built by a European consortium led by British Aerospace and Daimler Benz of Germany.

German delegation in Iran

TEHRAN (AFP) — A German diplomatic mission arrived in Iran Saturday on a bid to ease tension between the two countries which has heightened over the sentencing to death of a German national here for an illicit sexual affair.

Peter Dingers, the director general of the German foreign ministry's Middle East department, and Wolf-Rüdiger Born, the director-general of consular affairs, will hold talks with Iranian officials, a German diplomat said.

Relations took a sour turn in January after Bonn announced the arrest and conviction to death of German businessman Helmut Hofer for an alleged sexual affair with an Iranian Muslim woman.

Turkey unhappy at German FM's comments on Cyprus

ANKARA (AFP) — Germany's ambassador was summoned to the Turkish foreign ministry to explain remarks reportedly made by German Foreign Minister Klaus Kinkel about northern Cyprus, the Hurriyet newspaper reported Saturday.

Hurriyet said the Turkish authorities were unhappy about comments made by Mr. Kinkel in Strasbourg earlier this week, reportedly saying that Turkey "occupied" northern Cyprus in defiance of international law.

The paper said Ambassador Hans-Joachim Vergau was given a dressing down over Mr. Kinkel's comments.

Turkey insists its invasion of Cyprus in 1974 was in conformity with its status as a guarantor power on the island as enshrined in the 1960 treaty giving Cyprus independence from Britain.

The 1974 invasion was triggered by a Greek nationalist coup in Nicosia aimed at uniting the island with Greece, with Turkey insisting its move was aimed at protecting the ethnic Turkish community on the island.

The island has been divided into Greek and Turkish sectors for the past 24 years, with an estimated 35,000 Turkish soldiers controlling the northern third.

Relations between Germany and Turkey have been strained since a European Union (EU) summit in December last year decided to exclude Turkey from the next phase of the enlargement of the EU.

Lebanon protests to truce panel over injuries from Israeli shelling

BEIRUT (AFP) — Lebanon filed on Saturday a complaint to the international truce monitoring committee over Israeli shelling that wounded seven Lebanese civilians, a government official said.

Lebanon considered the Israeli shelling a violation to the April 1996 ceasefire accord which banned combatants from targeting civilians or launching attacks from civilian areas, he said.

Seven Lebanese civilians, including three children, were wounded Friday in Israeli bombardments on the villages of Mansouri and Yater, just outside the Israeli-occupied border zone in southern Lebanon, police said.

The truce committee — made up of representatives from France, Israel, Syria, Lebanon and the United States — was set up to oversee the April 1996 agreement. Ten Lebanese civilians have been killed and 39 others wounded in the violence in southern Lebanon this year.

Hamas calls Oslo peace process latest 'nakba' for Palestinians

HEBRON (AFP) — Some 1,000 supporters of the Islamic Resistance Movement, Hamas, rallied here on Saturday, branding President Yasser Arafat's peace deals with Israel the latest "catastrophe" in Palestinian history.

"The Palestinians have undergone many Nakba [catastrophes] in their history, and the latest is the signing of the Oslo accords, which gave legitimacy to the rapists of our land," Hamas official Nayef Rajub told the crowd in a speech.

"Nakba" is the term Palestinians use for the 1948 war which surrounded the creation of Israel and which led to the loss of Palestinian lands and the expulsion of hundreds of thousands of refugees.

Mr. Rajub slammed the Palestinian leader's acceptance of U.S. proposals that Israel withdraw from 13.1 per cent of the West Bank.

"This is just another in a long line of concessions. The Palestinian Authority has conceded 80 per cent of Palestine. How long will these concessions go on," Mr. Rajub said.

Hamas called the rally to mark the "fajra" or flight of the Muslim Prophet Muhammad from Mecca to Medina, but it was dominated by commemorations of the Nakba, which Palestinians mark on May 15.

Malaysian prime minister urges religious tolerance for Islam

CAIRO (AP) — Tolerance has fostered multi-ethnic Malaysia's economic growth, and is the key for Islam to erase the Western misconception that all Muslims are terrorists, Malaysia's prime minister said Saturday.

"So far we have failed" to be completely tolerant, Prime Minister Mahathir Mohammad, a Sunni Muslim, said in a speech at Al Azhar University, the world's oldest seat of Islamic learning.

This is due to "our own faults ... from our failure to adhere to the teachings of Islam," he said. Mr. Mahathir, who is here to attend a summit of developing nations, spoke after receiving an honorary doctorate from the university.

Students sat segregated, with most of the women in the balcony. Many men wore white prayer caps while women covered their hair with scarves.

Mr. Mahathir said Islam has its fair share of "black sheep," the terrorists who slaughter Muslims and non-Muslims, such as those in Algeria and Egypt.

Middle East's second largest dam inaugurated in S. Arabia

RIYADH (AP) — Crown Prince Abdullah inaugurated the Middle East's second largest dam on Saturday, Saudi television reported.

The King Fahd Dam in Beesha, 1,000 kilometres southwest of Riyadh, has a capacity of 325 million cubic meters of water, making it second only to Egypt's Aswan High Dam

German woman wounded in attack returns to Cairo

CAIRO (AP) — A German woman wounded in an attack in Cairo that killed nine tourists and their Egyptian bus driver returned to the city Saturday with a financial donation for the bus driver's family.

Gudrun Hoppe's husband was among the nine Germans killed last September when two brothers, in a brazen midday attack, fire-bombed a tourist bus outside the Egyptian Museum, then stormed it, opening fire on a tour group.

Ms. Hoppe, who came with a German television crew, said she would present the family of deceased bus driver Ramadan Afifi with $9,700.

The money was collected from German families, she said, as a symbol of their "love for other people, especially Egyptians." During her four-day visit to Egypt, Ms. Hoppe and the television crew will go to Luxor at the invitation of Egypt's Investment Authority.

Two brothers — one a failed pop musician put in a mental institution after a 1993 triple murder of foreigners — were sentenced to death by a military court for the bus attack.

The brothers said that the attack was carried out in revenge for a drawing done by an Israeli woman depicting the Islamic Prophet Muhammad as a pig.

Along with the fatalities, the attack left another 26 injured and shook Egypt's vital tourism industry, on the rebound in recent years after militant attacks drove away foreigners.

A month after the museum attack, tourism suffered a more damaging blow to tourism when six militants massacred 58 tourists and four Egyptians at an ancient Pharaonic temple in the southern town of Luxor. The six attackers were killed.

Queen delivers keynote address on World Red Cross/Crescent Day

AMMAN (J.T.) — Her Majesty Queen Noor on Saturday gave the keynote address at the first annual World Red Cross/Crescent Day, which was held in Amman on the occasion of World Red Cross and Red Crescent Day, according to a press release.

Jordan, according to the Queen, has a "close and fruitful relationship with the Red Cross and Red Crescent since 1948 with the founding of our national Red Crescent Society." The Queen said the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) established its regional headquarters in Amman as a base of operations for a wide range of activities in the Middle East that include "disaster relief efforts such as building emergency supply stocks in southern Lebanon, rehabilitation projects for the victims of the recent earthquakes in the Balkans, and community projects such as maternity hospitals in Bosnia, and job creation programmes and children's toy libraries for the disabled in the West Bank."

She added that "equally important are the ongoing efforts to introduce principles of humanitarian law into the curriculum of the countries of the region, as well as into school curricula."

International humanitarian law is known as the law of war and mainly focuses on protecting the wounded and the sick in armed forces, prisoners of war and civilians during armed conflicts. Queen Noor noted that many of the provisions of this law were inspired by the teachings of Islam.

"Islam called for treating prisoners in a dignified manner, providing them with adequate food and clothing, and after the cessation of warfare, to set them free, unconditionally or against a ransom. Treachery and violence against non-combatants, especially women, children and the elderly, were prohibited," she said.

These moral dictates were scrupulously observed by Islam's greatest leaders, such as Caliph Abu Bakr, who "ordered his troops to refrain from attacking civilians, and religious sites, and from destroying trees and gardens" and Salah Al Din's noble and generous treatment of his opponents and non-combatants, Queen Noor added.

Queen Noor noted that in today's world order, war could arise from "poverty and disaffection. Violence takes root in people who feel pushed to extremes, hopeless, diseased, and no amount of military might can provide full protection against it." She added that "our challenge is to define a new concept of humanitarian law based on mutual respect and concern."

According to the Queen, the United Nations has taken a leading role in promoting a new international framework for policy setting. Each U.N. conference has emphasised certain fundamental principles for global progress: sustainable development, human rights, women's empowerment, and the full participation of people in decisions that affect their lives. "This consensus provided us with new global norms for more responsible and humane policy — a comprehensive framework for progress," she stated.

There are 176 national Red Cross and Red Crescent societies throughout the world, including Jordan. Jordan's National Red Crescent Society was established in 1948 and its numerous achievements include the establishment of the Red Crescent hospital, vocational training, health education and first aid programmes, supporting homes for the elderly and the dissemination of International Humanitarian Law, according to the statement.

Earlier, Queen Noor visited the British Red Cross headquarters in London where she was briefed on their international "Family Tracing and Messages" services, which works to restore and maintain contact between families during armed conflict or natural disasters by conveying messages and helping trace relatives who have gone missing. Queen Noor was shown some examples of how people from the Middle East have been put in contact with each other.

Queen Noor was also honoured by the Broderers Company, who made the Queen an honorary member of the city of London. According to the Master of the Company, this honour has only been accorded to two other people: Queen Margrethe of Denmark and the Duchess of Gloucester, Princess Alice. He added that Queen Noor was chosen by the Broderers for "her national and international work in the fields of education, child welfare, women and community development, environmental and architectural conservation, culture and heritage" and particularly for her "handicrafts revival and development."

Ministry announces plans to set up shelter for abused women

By Rana Hussein
Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — The Ministry of Social Development announced plans Saturday to set up the first centre in Jordan to shelter abused women, including those kept under protective custody in prisons.

Minister of Social Development Mohammad Khair Mamsar told the Jordan Times that the centre's creation follows recommendations issued at a workshop held in September that examined ways of protecting abused women in Jordan.

Participants at the seminar were told that between 30-40 women are in prisons because they have nowhere to go if released.

"The workshop helped us discover that there are many women who are held in protective custody or simply cannot leave correctional centres because they have no place to go or their life would be endangered if they were released," Dr. Mamsar said.

Many women are forced to serve indefinite terms in the Kingdom's correctional facilities under what the state terms "administrative detention," but what is actually protection from being killed by family members.

Police records of the past 12 years show that crimes of honour have ranked highest among all murders committed in Jordan. Between 25 and 30 women are killed annually in the name of honour.

"It is our duty to help these women, and the entire project is aimed at rehabilitating these women and helping them return to society easily and safely," Dr. Mamsar explained.

Dr. Mamsar added that the ministry is currently seeking to rent a house temporarily to determine if the project can work.

"This is an entirely new experience for us, and for the time being we are looking for a place to rent to house the abused women or women whose lives are threatened until the real centre is built," he said.

Dr. Mamsar added that the house will also host women who are subjected to any form of domestic violence.

A 1994 study conducted by the Public Security Department (PSD) indicated that there were 4,962 cases of domestic violence against women registered with the police during 1991 and 1992.

"We will examine several solutions, such as trying to find possible partners for marriage, teaching them professions or trying to find jobs for them in order for them to mix easily into society," the minister said.

The project is being made possible through the collaboration of the Ministry of Social Development, the PSD, the Human Rights Forum for Women's Rights, and United Nations Development Fund for Women (UNIFEM).

"A Jordanian expert is currently working to prepare a comprehensive proposal for the women's guest house, and the next step will be to find donors to help it see the light of day," Dr. Mamsar said.

Fifteen public schools to receive free Internet time

By Ahmed Naser
Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN — Fifteen public schools will receive free Web time and reduced-cost modems from National Equipment and Technical Services (NETS), an Internet Service Provider (ISP), the company's general manager said Saturday.

These schools will receive free Web time and access to NETS' Bulletin Board Service (BBS) between the hours of 8:00 a.m. and 2:00 p.m., Marwan Juma told the Jordan Times.

The service is similar to a NETS' campaign earlier this year when home users were offered unlimited time between the hours of 5:00 p.m. and 9:00 a.m.

NETS will also sell a number of its asset modems, equipment that was used by the company itself, at reduced costs to schools that have computers but no modems, said Mr. Juma.

"We are working to ensure that His Majesty's wishes be fulfilled," said Mr. Juma, referring to His Majesty King Hussein's initiative earlier this month to make Hashem I, a satellite channel, available to public and private ISPs at reduced costs.

Earlier, Mr. Juma was quoted as saying that practical steps would be formulated to follow up on the initiative of the King to make the World Wide Web available to more, especially at the educational level.

Jordan's leading BBS will also offer free hands-on Internet training at their premises once a week to any public school teacher, said Mr. Juma.

"Providing free Internet time is one thing, but if there are no teachers to pass on the know-how to students, then it's useless," he added.

NETS has 1,800 Internet users out of its 3,400 BBS subscribers.

Over 120,000 to receive JD26m in salary bonuses — Lawzi

By Tareq Ayyoub
Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN — The government Saturday announced that it will grant more than 120,000 members of the Armed Forces and other security agencies an extra month's salary, according to acting Minister of Information Nasser Lawzi.

Mr. Lawzi said the move comes in implementation of an order by His Majesty King Hussein earlier this month to grant members of the Armed Forces, General Intelligence Department, Civil Defence Department and the police the bonus.

Mr. Lawzi stated that the payments will cost the treasury more than JD26 million. Pensioners and military retirees are not eligible for the bonus, nor are civil servants, he added.

"The government has ordered the Ministry of Finance to develop a mechanism to enable those eligible to receive the bonus by the end of the month," the minister said.

He said the additional salaries will be paid according to the total salary of each employee, not on the basic salary, as was reported earlier in the media.

The official declined to say where the Ministry of Finance would draw the necessary funds or whether the government would resort to borrowing from local or foreign financial institutions.

The decision to grant the employees the extra month's salary coincided with the 45th anniversary of the King's assumption of his constitutional powers.

Minister calls for stronger economic ties between Arab World, China

AMMAN (Petra) — Acting Minister of Industry, Trade and Supply Muthair Haddadin on Saturday opened the third meeting of the board of directors of the Arab-Chinese Chamber of Commerce with a call for stronger economic and trade ties between China and the Arab World.

Dr. Haddadin expressed hope that Arab countries and China would take major strides in bolstering trade exchanges and promoting bilateral cooperation in technology-related fields.

In his address to the opening session, Haddadin, chairman of the Federation of Jordanian Chambers of Commerce, said Jordan appreciates

China's political views on Arab causes, including the Palestine question and endeavours to lift the embargo on Iraq.

Mr. Murad said Jordan was looking forward to new scopes of cooperation between the Arabs and the Chinese to build on the historical links between the two groups.

Jordan has established a strong foundation of cooperation with China in trade, he said, noting that last year the Kingdom exported JD14 million worth of products to Chinese markets and imported JD72 million worth of Chinese goods.

Over the past few years, Jordan has created the appropriate climate for foreign investments and has built infrastructure to pave the way for new enterprises and joint ventures.

Mr. Murad added. Adnan Qsar, chairperson of the Arab Chambers of Industry, Trade and Agriculture (ACITA), spoke of the need for removing barriers still hampering trade and enhancing the globalisation of trade. He also called on China to enter into joint ventures in the Arab World to increase trade exchanges.

Burhan Dajani, ACITA secretary general, said privatisation in Arab countries is expected to further bolster Arab-Chinese relations and strengthen bilateral trade.

Dentists' union elects new president

AMMAN (J.T.) — The Jordan Dentists Association (JDA) on Friday elected Ahmad Qaderi as the new JDA president for the next two years, succeeding former chief Sa'ad Abu Maizar.

Dr. Qaderi received 644 votes against 447 for his only competitor, Hanihah Naji.

Out of 3,300 registered dentists, only 1,115 were eligible to vote since they had paid their association dues and membership fees.

The JDA also elected nine members to the board out of 21 candidates, according to association sources, who noted that the board also has a two-year mandate ending in 2000.

After his election, Dr. Qaderi delivered a brief address thanking voters and pledging to work for all dentists and help promote the status and the role of the JDA.

Before the elections, Dr. Qaderi said that if elected he would give due attention to helping graduates and unemployed dentists find jobs and would try to set a minimum salary for dentists, especially those working in the public sector.

"We will be cooperating with the government to make it compulsory for companies and organisations to arrange for the appointment of dentists for their staff," he said.

Dr. Qaderi voiced his opposition to the termination of the association's savings and health insurance and pensions funds, adding that he would resist any attempt by any party to interfere with these funds.

The new JDA president said he would be working with the board to arrange training courses for the benefit of new dentists.

Prior to the elections, the JDA general assembly reviewed and endorsed reports on the association's financial and administrative performance, the balance sheet, and the 1998 financial situation.

NEWS IN BRIEF

Amman area phone number changes to be completed by July

AMMAN (J.T.) — The Jordan Telecommunications Company (JTC) announced Saturday that the renumbering of telephone numbers in the Amman region from six to seven digits will be completed by the end of July. According to a report in the Arabic daily Al Ra'i, JTC board chairman Walid Dweik said the company's next step would be to issue a new telephone directory listing 270,000 numbers. The present directory was issued in 1995. The number of telephone lines in the Kingdom was expected to rise to 500,000 from the present 425,000 by the end of the year, he said.

Housekeeper to be buried today after three-week ordeal

By Dima Hamdan
Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN — The body of an impoverished Sri Lankan housekeeper, who died from a heart attack last month, will be laid to rest at Amman's Sahab Cemetery today after Colombo ended three weeks of wrangling by agreeing to shoulder the cost of her burial.

The niece of Rukmuna Kalvachidona, a door-to-door domestic helper who died three weeks ago, turned to the Sri Lankan embassy for help after her family sent her written permission to bury her aunt in Amman because they could not afford the expense of transporting the body back to Colombo.

The Jordanian employer of the niece, in a letter to the Jordan Times on Wednesday, had charged that the embassy was not showing any cooperation and told her they had no funds to help bury her in Jordan. Hence, the employer turned to the Internet to publicise the situation.

"Finally, the phone rang this morning and an embassy official confirmed to the niece that the burial would take place on Sunday after the embassy received funds from Sri Lanka," said a source close to the niece.

The embassy confirmed to the Jordan Times that they had received the money and that the burial would take place on Sunday.

Over 25,000 Sri Lankans work in Jordan, mostly as domestic helpers earning a minimum of JD60 a month. Many of them have often complained of abuse by their employers, such as working for 19 hours a day non-stop.

If a Sri Lankan dies abroad, his/her family are responsible for transporting the body back home. If the family cannot pay, then the government assumes responsibility.

Classical guitarist to perform at arts festival

By Jean-Claude Elias
Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN — Under the patronage of Her Majesty Queen Noor and at the invitation of the American Center at the American embassy, classical guitarist Jad Azkoul will perform on Monday and Wednesday as part of the American Arts Festival.

The American-Lebanese musician, now in his late 40s, started playing the guitar at 13. One particular aspect of his background is the diversity of the places where he has studied and taught, including Australia, Lebanon and the U.S., to name only those three. Among his teachers one can find great names like Lagoya — from the celebraed duo Alexandre Lagoya and Ida Presti — Nadia Boulanger and Abel Carlevaro.

The awards he has received, the publications in which he has participated, the positions he has held and the prestigious venues at which he has performed, including Jerash Festival a few years ago, are too many to be listed.

Mr. Azkoul belongs to the elite who have contributed to classical guitar's current status. The instrument was long considered "secondary," mainly because of its limited acoustic volume, but also because it was not officially recognised as an element of the symphonic orchestra. The "Concerto de Aranjuez" by Joaquin Rodrigo was the first major concerto for guitar and orchestra to gain world-wide popularity.

Describing Mr. Azkoul's ability, the Washington Post wrote in May 1995: "He can make his instrument sing... with the occasional accents and hesitations of the human voice." The tone of the classical guitar is one of the most delicate to manipulate, but Mr. Azkoul seems to have mastered this essential aspect of the technique.

Monday's programme will feature works by Heitor Villa-Lobos, Abel Carlevaro, Antonio Lauro and Lourival Silvestre. Wednesday's concert will feature Mr. Azkoul performing with award-winning Jordanian oud player Sakher Hamar.

Cabinet endorses British grant memo on developing financial market

AMMAN (Petra) — The Cabinet on Saturday endorsed a memorandum of understanding to be signed by Jordan and Britain on financing the development of the Amman Financial Market over the coming two years.

The estimated JD1.41 million project will be funded as a grant under the British technical aid programme to Jordan. Minister of Planning Rima Khalaf has been authorised to sign the document on behalf of the government.

The Cabinet, which met in a regular session chaired by Prime Minister Abdul Salam Majali, authorised Minister of Transport Sami Gammoul to sign a tender agreement for consulting services to be conducted by a Japanese firm on rehabilitating the railway line linking Amman and Zarqa.

The Council of Ministers formed a delegation led by Minister of Labour Mohammad Farhan to take part in the International Labour Organisation's 86th conference, to be held in Geneva from June 2-18. The delegation will also attend an Arab labour ministers' meeting prior to the conference to coordinate Arab positions on the conference's agenda.

A delegation led by Ibrahim Badran, director of the Palestine Affairs Department, was assembled to take part in the 60th meeting of a Palestinian refugees' council in Cairo between June 21 and 27.

The Council formed a delegation led by the secretary general of the Ministry of Health to take part in the Joint Jordanian-Algerian Committee meeting on trade and health affairs, due to be held in Algeria from May 30-June 6.

A delegation was formed from the Ministry of Awqaf and Islamic Affairs to take part in an international meeting on Jerusalem to be held in Tehran between May 19 and 29.

Contact Group imposes embargo on Yugoslavia over Kosovo

LONDON (AFP) — The six-nation Contact Group, except Russia, has decided to slap an embargo on investments in Yugoslavia in response to the crack-down in the province of Kosovo. British Foreign Secretary Robin Cook said Saturday.

It completes a series of measures to isolate the federal regime in Yugoslavia, he said.

The Contact Group on conflicts in the former Yugoslavia comprises Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Russia and the United States.

The ministers decided the tougher sanctions during a meeting in London of the Group of Eight industrial powers, which also includes Canada and Japan.

Their meeting was to prepare the ground for the G8 summit of the world's leading industrialised nations which takes place in Birmingham, central England, next week.

Canada approved the decision but Russia, a traditional ally of the Yugoslav government which is dominated by Serbia and embroiled in an increasingly violent crackdown in the ethnic-Albanian province of Kosovo, expressed reservations.

Japan said it would consider its international obligations before taking a decision, Mr. Cook said.

Mr. Cook said the contact group expressed its "deep concern" about the situation in Kosovo, dominated by ethnic Albanians, and was sharply critical of Yugoslav leader Slobodan Milosevic.

At their last meeting in Rome on April 29, the Contact Group voted to freeze Yugoslav and Serb funds and warned they would block foreign investment if there was no meaningful progress in opening a dialogue with the Albanians in Kosovo.

"We are anxious that Belgrade should be pressed into meeting (former Spanish Premier Felipe) Gonzalez," said Mr. Cook. Mr. Gonzalez is heading a Conference for Security and Cooperation in Europe mission to mediate in the crisis.

But Mr. Milosevic Friday rejected the latest demands that he accept foreign mediation. Belgrade would "not accept" a visit by the OSCE envoy to discuss "internal questions" that are of concern only to Serbia and Yugoslavia, said a top Yugoslav official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The new investment ban applies to the whole of the Yugoslav Republic but Mr. Cook said the international community was aware of the progressive position taken by Montenegro and wanted to ensure that the "pressure" was felt by Belgrade.

U.S. President Bill Clinton had already warned that another Bosnia in Kosovo had to be avoided with "no options ruled out" for getting a dialogue going between Serbs and Albanians in the province. Earlier in London, German Foreign Minister Klaus Kinkel said he had "great concern that the (Kosovo) situation is turning into a guerrilla war" and that this must be avoided.

Canadian Foreign Minister Lloyd Axworthy said the situation was getting "out of hand and requires serious action."

Violence in the province has already cost over 130 lives since the beginning of the year, and clashes between separatist groups and Serb police have been growing almost daily in the province where ethnic Albanians form 90 per cent of the population.

Four die in Kosovo fighting

KOMORANE, Serbia (R) — Serbian police closed Kosovo's main east-west highway Saturday after fighting with separatist guerrillas in which at least three ethnic Albanians were killed in the last 24 hours, Albanian sources said.

The deaths included a child and an elderly shepherd in the village of Blinac Friday. On the road which crosses central Kosovo between Pristina and Pec, a guerrilla killed in Belgrade.

A fourth Albanian died in separate fighting around Decan in southwest Kosovo. More than 20,000 ethnic Albanians chanted support for the guerrillas of the under-ground Kosovo Liberation Army in a peaceful demonstration in Pristina Saturday.

The KLA is fighting for the independence of Kosovo where 90 per cent of the population is ethnic Albanian. Major powers, including the United States, have urged the Serbian government to end its military operations in Kosovo.

Tibetan exiles picket U.N. office in New Delhi to demand independence

NEW DELHI (AFP) — Some 200 Tibetan exiles from Nepal demonstrated outside the U.N. office in New Delhi, Saturday calling for an end to Chinese rule in their homeland and an international probe into rights abuses there.

Witnesses said the protesters shouted anti-Chinese slogans and urged the United Nations to appoint a special envoy to determine the future of Tibet.

A statement by the Tibetan Welfare Association, based in Kathmandu, said the U.N. representative should "promote a peaceful settlement of the question of Tibet and initiate a U.N.-sponsored plebiscite to ascertain the wishes of the Tibetan people."

It also called for a "special rapporteur to investigate the situation of human rights in Chinese-occupied Tibet."

Late last month, a Tibetan monk immolated himself in New Delhi in the first suicide protest in India after police broke up a marathon hunger strike by six Tibetans aimed at demanding Tibetan independence. Five others have replaced them and were still fasting Saturday.

Chinese troops occupied Tibet in 1951. The Dalai Lama and some 100,000 Tibetans fled to India after Beijing crushed an anti-Chinese uprising in Tibet in 1959.

Taleban, Masood exchange heavy fire north of Kabul

HOSSEIN KOT, Afghanistan (AFP) — Taleban forces and troops loyal to the ousted government traded heavy shells and mortars on frontlines here north of the militia-held capital Kabul Saturday, AFP witnessed.

Hardline Muslim militia commanders also asserted their readiness for a full-scale attack following two days of artillery, rocket and mortar fire but no change in positions only 25 kilometres north of the capital.

"There has been some shelling since yesterday (Friday) morning but there hasn't been any change in the frontline," Taleban frontline commander Haji Mullah Abdul Sattar explained at his rear-line command post.

Both the Taleban and opposition troops continued to trade heavy fire throughout the day, but there have been no reports of any infantry engagements or casualties.

He said although Taleban forces — who have been deadlocked here for over eight months — were ready to attack forces of ex-regime commander Ahmad Shah Masood, orders to attack had yet to come.

"We are hopeful to expand the fighting," Mr. Sattar enthused. "We have been ready to launch a big offensive for a long time but the leaders have been telling us to wait for the results of the talks."

Peace talks between the Taleban and the northern-based opposition alliance broke down a week ago leaving most observers — and commanders here — expectant of more fighting.

"The opposition are barbaric so how can we, the military people, want peace," Mr. Sattar said. "No one will accept any deal where the Koran and Shariah are not ruled."

The Taleban hold around two-thirds of Afghanistan including the capital Kabul which they seized in September 1996, and have imposed what they say is the world's purest Islamic state on areas under their control.

The anti-Taleban alliance includes a collection of former arch-enemies, which came together when the Taleban attempted to extend their control into northern Afghanistan.

It includes the ex-government of President Burhanuddin Rabbani and topgun Mr. Masood, ex-Communist and ethnic-Uzbek warlord Abdul Rashid Dostum and the Shiite Muslim Hezb-i-Wahdat.

Cambodians urged to 'vote their conscience'

KAMPONG SPEU, Cambodia (AFP) — Cambodian strongman Hun Sen Saturday urged voters to select candidates of their own choice in July's scheduled election and ignore, but report, any cases of harassment.

"Don't be afraid of anyone, just vote for whoever you love or like, that's what I ask for," the powerful second prime minister told villagers here southwest of the capital at a school inauguration.

"The main question is your decision who to vote for and what party you believe can bring your children a bright future."

Hun Sen also pleaded for partisan political campaigners not to use violence to get their message across or try to illegally influence the results of the July 26 election.

"Don't throw stones at each other, don't fire catapults at one another no matter what any party says during the campaign," he said. "There must be a guarantee (that the election) will be free of intimidation and threats."

"All parties must enjoy the opportunity to campaign... We must do whatever we can to prevent people from dying during the election."

He added that while voters should ignore any attempt to unduly influence their ballots, they should report any such incidents to the authorities who would punish the violators.

Human rights groups and others have warned that violence and intimidation threaten the credibility of the election, especially following Hun Sen's ouster last year of co-premier Prince Norodom Ranariddh.

About 100 royalist supporters have been killed since he was ousted, according to the U.N. Centre for Human Rights and no one has yet been brought to justice for the murders.

The international community, which has called for the deaths to be investigated, has also pressured Phnom Penh to allow Prince Ranariddh, whose party won historic U.N.-brokered polls in 1993, to return from exile and participate in the election.

The prince's opposition alliance has threatened to boycott the polls unless they are convinced the environment will be truly free and fair.

While it remains unclear whether they will follow through with the threat, they have thus far met all registration deadlines for the elections.

Voter registration is to begin on May 18.

Scuffles break out in student rallies in Indonesia

JAKARTA (AFP) — Scuffles broke out in student rallies across Indonesia Saturday as hundreds more protested calling for sweeping reforms amid the country's economic crisis.

Scuffles broke out in at least three towns on Java as students called for a complete overhaul of the country's political system and economic improvements.

Another demonstration in the eastern Indonesian city of Ujungpandang went off peacefully Saturday.

Some 500 students from the state Pajajaran university in Bandung, West Java, scuffled with police who blocked their way off the campus, the head of campus security, Subada said.

"Tear gas and rubber-coated bullets were fired but there were only some light injuries when students were beaten or trampled over," Subada said.

However, a staff member at the nearby Boromeus hospital's emergency ward said "there are many (students) brought here," but declined to give a figure or any details on the injured.

Suryadi of the Bandung chapter of the Legal Aid Institute said he had been told several students were injured by rubber bullets but he had yet to confirm the report.

Subada said authorities had shut the road in front of the university to traffic.

In Yogyakarta, central Java, rocks flew as over 1,000 students from two neighbouring universities clashed with police there, a staff of the Islamic Institute there said.

"It is still happening and the police have already taken over the university's security guard post in the front," said the member of staff, who identified himself as Heri.

The incident started when about 100 students from the Higher School of Agriculture attempted to take their protest out of their campus, Heri said.

Police who started beating up the students also assaulted many students from the Islamic Institute just across the road.

Students rushed out of the Islamic Institute to help their friends and started throwing rocks at the police who then charged into the campus after them, Heri said.

In Jakarta, about 100 students of the Attahiriyyah Islamic University Saturday attempted to take to the streets and walk to a nearby bus terminal to protest a fuel price rise and demand that President Suharto step down.

The scuffle broke out when the students had walked half way to the terminal and they were pushed back into their university by stick-wielding police. No one was injured from the incident, said an AFP photographer.

Thousands of students in Ujungpandang, the capital of South Sulawesi, continued to trundle around town in convoys of trucks, cars and motorcycles, airing their demands for reforms, said Hasbi Abdullah of the Ujungpandang branch of the Legal Aid Institute.

"Their main demand revolves around urgent reforms but their yells have since Friday also included calls for Suharto to step down," Mr. Abdullah said.

He said there had been no reported incident so far between the students and security forces.

In the East Kalimantan provincial capital of Samarinda, civil servants changed their vehicles' official licence plates into regular civilian ones for fear of being targeted after clashes there Thursday, the official Antara news agency said.

An insurance sales manager here said that many car owners have begun purchasing extra riot-coverage following the student rallies.

"The most popular policy now is the coverage for riot damages," the manager who asked to remain anonymous told AFP, adding the new policy would cover minor damages up to car burning.

Hindu nationalists, allies meet to resolve disputes

NEW DELHI (AFP) — Hindu nationalist leaders met Saturday to resolve disputes threatening the multi-party alliance.

An official of the nationalist Bharatiya Janata Party (BJP) said the meeting was chaired by Prime Minister Atal Behari Vajpayee at his official residence.

The multi-party BJP-led coalition has been attacked by a coalition of opposition parties, including the Congress party, which has led to the sacking of two cabinet ministers.

Saturday's meeting was the first gathering of the BJP and its allies in more than a year since the government was formed in March after a coalition of a "black" and "white" parties.

The Hindu Times newspaper published the meeting could see demands from regional parties for more cabinet seats ahead of an expected election in May.

Home Minister and BJP leader Lal Krishna Advani, the number two in the cabinet, recently admitted that the government had endured a "period of much pain" in its last months.

He said, however, that the "pains and tribulations" had "taught us a lesson to strengthen ourselves."

The Hindu nationalists emerged as the largest bloc in India's parliament after the February-March elections and had to win over several other regional parties.

The BJP had campaigned on a platform of ending the "black" and "white" governments and had to win over several other regional parties.

The government faced its first crisis last month when a cabinet minister from southern India, Jayalalitha Jayaram, demanded the resignation of several ministers over their protests in the cabinet was forced to quit over corruption allegations.

She commanded the support of "members of parliament" within the 264-seat coalition and could have brought down the government by switching to the equally fragmented opposition.

Prime Minister Atal Behari Vajpayee was forced to sack his communications minister to placate Mr. Jayaram, who also wanted the premier to dismiss the provincial government in her southern home state of Tamil Nadu.

Tamil Nadu is ruled by the DMK party, a prominent partner in Mr. Vajpayee's government.

When that crisis blew over, another ally of the nationalists put his provincial ministerial post following charges of corruption.

That was followed by a rebellion by Defence Minister George Fernandes, a socialist leader member of the ruling coalition, who accused China of constructing a heliport in a disputed area at the border and forcing Pakistan to develop a surface-to-air missile.

Mr. Vajpayee denied the first allegation but Mr. Fernandes' repeated anti-China comments have been an acute embarrassment for the government.

More bodies pulled out as Italian mud hardens

SARNO, Italy (R) — More bodies were bailed out of the debris of southern Italy's mudslides Saturday as a row raged over who to blame for a disaster which killed scores of people and made more than 1,400 homeless.

Officials put the known death toll at 112, 91 of them in the town of Sarno, where one man was pulled out of rubble alive Friday after three days buried up to his neck.

The discovery of Roberto Rostelli, 22, raised hopes that more survivors might be found. But as emergency workers laid row upon row of coffins in a school gym in Sarno, those hopes grew ever dimmer.

Dry, sunny weather brought no relief to the ravaged towns, hardening the mud into solid blocks and forcing relief workers to attack it with pickaxes as well as shovels.

Excavation efforts were hampered because dumps where debris was being tipped had filled up, forcing lorries to drive ever further from the disaster site to empty the waste.

Prime Minister Romano

Prodi, returning to Rome from a visit to the United States, was to chair a high-level meeting later on the tragedy, triggered when days of driving rain sent mud and topsoil gushing down mountainsides and coursing through the impoverished region of Campania.

Mr. Prodi's government, which has set aside 50 billion lire ($30 million) to aid initial relief and reconstruction efforts, has borne the brunt of the accusations which invariably follow natural disasters in Italy.

Politicians, local officials and editorialists have accused the government of failing to stop illegal construction or take steps to reverse environmental imbalance in the poor south.

They say the government was so busy cutting costs to qualify for the European Union's single currency that it neglected the south, or Mezzogiorno.

The government has declared a state of emergency in three provinces and is to fly the flag at half-mast throughout the country Monday.

Officials of the province of Naples, near Campania, have called on the government to organise a national lottery to raise funds for the stricken areas, where hundreds of houses have been destroyed and entire families buried.

Italian media have dubbed the disaster the "Pompeii of the year 2000", a reference to the volcanic eruption that buried thousands of people in volcanic ash near Naples in 79 A.D.

The civil protection department said 1,435 people had been made homeless. It has stopped issuing estimates of missing amid confusion over the numbers.

Some 42 U.S. Marines from Naples Saturday joined 40 U.S. Navy servicemen already helping relief efforts in the town of Quindici. Lieutenant Jeff Gordon told Reuters from the scene.

A convoy of U.S. Navy vehicles carrying emergency equipment headed to Quindici Friday, where servicemen erected a camp to shelter Italian volunteers and set about carting away earth from the excavation area.

They may have mistakenly assumed the driver was a rival clan member.

The other passengers in the car, a seven-year-old boy, his mother and grandmother were seriously wounded and rushed to hospital, where they were said to be in life-threatening condition.

Police condemned the refusal of witnesses to come forward.

14 Indian tribespeople killed in renewed ethnic violence

GUWAHATI, India (AFP) — At least 14 tribespeople were hacked to death in their sleep and several houses burnt early Saturday in a renewed spate of ethnic violence in the far-eastern Indian state of Assam, police said.

A police official in Assam's troubled Kokrajhar district, 200 kilometres from the state capital Guwahati, said members of the Bodo tribe attacked two villages of the rival Santhal tribe before dawn.

"Most of the victims were hacked to death. The Bodos used machetes and other weapons," Kokrajhar police official A.H. Shaikh told AFP.

"They burnt down two villages. We do not know the exact number of houses that were razed or the number of injured."

Over the past week, some 20 people have been killed in Bodo-Santhals clashes for land rights in Kokrajhar.

In November 1996, a clash between Bodos and Santhals in Kokrajhar, which borders the Himalayan kingdom of Bhutan, left more than 500 people dead.

Thousands of people have died in Assam in lingering ethnic and separatist violence. Assam is the biggest of seven states in India's troubled far-east.

Mafia shooting kills four, wounds three in southern Italy

ROME (AFP) — An eight-year-old girl and three men were killed, and three other people wounded by mafia gunmen who fired on the wrong targets in a revenge attack, hospital officials in southern Italy said Saturday.

Police said the attack was intended to be a settling of scores carried out by the Calabria region's mafia, the N'drangheta.

The shooting occurred in Oppido Mamertina, around 60 kilometres north of Reggio Calabria, on the toe of Italy.

The gunman first opened fire in the town butcher's store, killing the butcher and a mother man who was reported to belong to a rival clan.

They then shot at a passing car, killing the driver and his grand-daughter. Police said the gunmen may have mistakenly assumed the driver was a rival clan member.

The other passengers in the car, a seven-year-old boy, his mother and grandmother were seriously wounded and rushed to hospital, where they were said to be in life-threatening condition.

Police condemned the refusal of witnesses to come forward.

Hindu nationalists, allies meet to resolve disputes

NEW DELHI (AFP) — India's ruling Hindu nationalist party and its numerous coalition allies began talks here Saturday to resolve disputes threatening the multi-party alliance.

An official of the nationalist Bharatiya Janata Party (Indian People's Party) said the meeting was chaired by Premier Atal Behari Vajpayee at his official residence.

The month-old BJP-led coalition has been wracked by veiled threats of withdrawal of support, increasing demands from regional partners and corruption allegations which have led to the sacking of two cabinet ministers.

Saturday's meeting was the first gathering of the BJP and top leaders from its more than dozen allies since the government was formed in March. An official called it a "stock-taking."

The Hindustan Times newspaper predicted the meeting could see demands from regional allies for more cabinet seats ahead of an expected cabinet expansion.

Home Minister and outgoing BJP President Lal Krishna Advani, the number two in the cabinet, recently admitted that the government had endured a "period of much pain" in its first month.

He said, however, that the "trials and tribulations" had "stepped our resolve to stabilise and to strengthen ourselves."

The Hindu nationalists emerged as the largest bloc in India's hung parliament after deadlocked February-March elections and had to win over around a dozen regional parties.

The BJP had campaigned on a pledge to end crippling political instability in India, which has had five governments and two elections since 1996.

The government faced its first crisis last month when a maverick politician from southern India, Jayalalitha Jayaram, demanded the resignation of several ministers after one of her protégés in the cabinet was forced to quit over corruption allegations.

She commands the support of 27 members of parliament within the 264-seat coalition and could have brought down the government by switching to the equally fragmented opposition.

Prime Minister Atal Behari Vajpayee was forced to sack his communications minister to placate Ms. Jayaram, who also wants the premier to dismiss the provincial government in her southern home state of Tamil Nadu.

Tamil Nadu is ruled by the DMK party, a prominent partner in Mr. Vajpayee's government.

When that crisis blew over, another ally of the nationalists quit his provincial ministerial post following charges of corruption.

That was followed by sabre-rattling by Defence Minister George Fernandes, a socialist leader member of the ruling coalition, who accused China of constructing a helped in a disputed area at the border and helping Pakistan to develop a surface-to-surface missile.

Mr. Vajpayee denied the first allegation but Mr. Fernandes' repeated anti-China comments have been an acute embarrassment for the government.

U.N. moves to implement Tiger pledges on Sri Lanka war

COLOMBO (AFP) — The United Nations said Saturday it was working on a plan to ensure that Sri Lanka's warring parties kept their promises to spare children from the separatist conflict.

Olara Otunnu, a special representative of Secretary General Kofi Annan looking after the welfare of children in armed conflict, said the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE) had promised immediately to stop recruiting child warriors and to halt attacks on civilians.

Leaders of the LTTE also promised to review their strategies and tactics of attacking civilian targets, Mr. Otunnu told reporters after visiting the embattled northern region during his week-long visit here.

Mr. Otunnu, a former Ugandan foreign minister, said both the LTTE and the government would be involved in framing a mechanism to monitor the implementation of the pledges he extracted from the two sides.

He said the LTTE had agreed to a monitoring mechanism after agreeing to five points he raised about the welfare of children and civilian communities and the free movement of people in the conflict zone.

The U.N. official said he was concerned about newspaper reports on the day he arrived last Sunday, that the government was about to launch a recruitment drive in schools for its army.

However Mr. Otunnu said the authorities had since assured him that there was no such plan.

"If you start it in schools then it is a slippery slope," Mr. Otunnu said, cautioning the government against deviating from the policy of not recruiting anyone aged below 18.

During the U.N. official's visit to the northern Vanni region, the LTTE declared a unilateral truce. Mr. Otunnu said both sides had agreed to observe "two days of tranquillity."

However the government denied it agreed to the truce and accused the LTTE of breaking its own unilateral ceasefire by killing three policemen within an hour of Mr. Otunnu's arrival in Vanni Wednesday.

The military as well as the government has treated LTTE pledges to Mr. Otunnu with scepticism.

Army chief Rohan Daluwatte said Friday he did not believe the LTTE would keep its promise and said most of its fighters were boys and girls below the age of 17.

"I don't believe that they will not take child soldiers," Mr. Daluwatte said. "It is just not possible for them not to recruit children. We have seen from the pictures of captured Tigers and those killed that they are kids."

Military officials also did not take seriously the LTTE offer not to target civilian installations.

Mr. Otunnu said he had expressed his "gravest concern" about the continuing targeting of civilians throughout the country during his talks with Tiger political leader Thamilselvan and top ideologue Anton Balasingham.

"The LTTE leadership acknowledged this to be an important and legitimate concern and undertook to review its strategies and tactics in this regard," the U.N. official said.

Security in the capital has been tightened amid fears of Tamil Tiger bomb attacks. There has been at least one bomb attack every month in and around the capital and key towns since the LTTE blasted the World Trade Centre in Colombo last October.

More than 55,000 people have been killed in fighting in the past 25 years and about a quarter of the victims are believed to be children.

Kofi Annan calls for end of flow of arms to refugee camps

KAMPALA (AFP) — U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan Saturday said humanitarian agencies did not have the means to address and resolve refugee problems requiring political and military responses and appealed for an end to be put to the flow of arms to refugee camps.

Addressing the closing session of a two-day regional workshop here on refugee issues in the Great Lakes region, Mr. Annan said: "Humanitarian agencies should not be expected to address and resolve problems which require political and military responses such as the separation of refugees from military elements, militiamen and terrorists."

"Humanitarian assistance is ineffective if illegal flow of arms and the use of landmines in camps are not checked," Mr. Annan told the workshop, co-convened by Organisation of African Unity (OAU) Secretary-General Salim Ahmed

Salim and U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees Sadako Ogata.

Mr. Annan said that at times, humanitarian assistance became "an involuntary cause of insecurity, a tool of war."

"The international community did not provide adequate military resources to separate refugees from genocidal elements between 1994 and 1996," said Mr. Annan, who was in charge of U.N. peacekeeping operations at the time of the Rwandan genocide, during which between 500,000 and 800,000 people were slaughtered.

Mr. Annan said: "We made mistakes in Rwanda," an echo of his earlier speech in the Rwandan parliament Thursday when he admitted that the world had shirked its responsibilities over Rwanda.

"But we should not see anymore refugees being taken hostage by those whose interests are to instigate violence and to create instability," Mr. Annan pledged.

Saying that the Great Lakes region was still grappling with the consequences of that biblical exodus, Mr. Annan pointed out: "There were still thousands of Burundians remaining in exile in the Kivu region of eastern Congo, and the unrest threatened to cause further displacement to innocent civilians."

Friday, Ms. Ogata told the workshop that her office had in the past four years been confronted in this region with the most difficult refugee problem ever, a reference to the mass exodus of refugees sparked by the 1994 Rwandan genocide.

Ms. Ogata said thousands of Rwandans left the country, among them armed former soldiers and the dreaded Interahamwe militia, who soon regrouped, reorganised and launched attacks on their home country, while genuine refugees were held hostage and even killed when they expressed the desire to return home.

"There is a growing problem of how to separate refugees from fighters and how to maintain the civilian character of the refugee camps," Ms. Ogata said, adding that the problem lay not with the principles of refugee law, but in their application.

However, she welcomed Mr. Annan's call in Kigali to establish an "international mechanism" which will help countries of asylum to maintain the civilian character of refugee camps, but distanced herself from failure by the international community to step in during the Rwandan refugee crisis.

"The international community failed to provide the support that was needed — the support which I repeatedly requested through the U.N. secretary general and the Security Council," Ms. Ogata said.

Ugandan President Yoweri Museveni, meanwhile, blamed colonialism as the major cause of refugee problems in Africa and called for its ideological defeat to end the scourge of refugees on the continent.

"To defeat the cause of these refugees, we must inflict ideological defeat. We can't allow these theories to linger and then manage the refugees created by them," Mr. Museveni told the workshop in his keynote opening address.

The objective of the workshop in Kampala, which is a follow-up on the visit of Ms. Ogata to the region last February, is to seek solutions to the forced displacements in the region, particularly how to reconcile the protection of refugees with the security of the host country and its neighbours.

Mr. Annan was leaving Kampala Saturday afternoon for Asmara, last stage of his eight-nation African tour.

Yeltsin's kidnapped Chechenya envoy is alive

MOSCOW (AFP) — President Boris Yeltsin's envoy to Chechenya, who was kidnapped on May 1, is still alive, Russian Interior Minister Sergei Stepashin was quoted as saying Saturday by Interfax news agency.

Valentin Vlasov was the first senior Russian official to be kidnapped in the break-away Russian republic since it won de facto independence from Moscow in a 21-month war, which ended in August 1996.

Mr. Stepashin said the authorities were expecting to receive the kidnappers' demands for Mr. Vlasov's release within the next four or five days. The envoy was said to be held in Chechenya.

The minister gave no further details.

His remarks were the first official word on Mr. Vlasov's fate since he was kidnapped by five armed men near the border between the separatist Russian republic of Chechenya and neighbouring Ingushetia.

No ransom demand has been received by the Chechen authorities, who have offered a $100,000 reward for information leading to Mr. Vlasov's safe return. Moscow said it would not pay a ransom.

A massive security operation throughout the mountainous republic has so far failed to reveal the whereabouts of the presidential envoy.

On May 5, Russian President Boris Yeltsin warned there could be no forgiveness for the kidnappers.

Mr. Vlasov's driver and bodyguard, both Chechens, were arrested after the kidnapping on suspicion of complicity and negligence respectively.

Chechen figures last month showed that 65 people, including six foreigners, were being held hostage. The kidnappers normally demand heavy ransoms to release their hostages.

Cook says he has nothing to hide in arms-to-Sierra Leone scandal

LONDON (AFP) — British Foreign Secretary Robin Cook said Saturday he had "nothing to hide" in the arms-to-Sierra Leone scandal as a British firm of mercenaries said it helped mount a coup in the West African country with the support of senior officials in London.

The operation in February to restore elected President Ahmad Tejan Kabbah, ousted in a military coup in May 1997, was initiated and approved by Britain, Sandline International, a British firm of military consultants, has alleged.

Such action was in defiance of a U.N. arms embargo.

London papers said that if the mercenaries' claims are confirmed, Mr. Cook's apparent ignorance about the British government's role in the sanctions-busting arms exports would be a deep incompetence.

"What is being revealed in this sorry affair is an incompetence so gross that it comes close to a dereliction of duty," the mid-market Daily Mail wrote.

There are already two inquiries into the affair, a criminal one under the Customs and Excise Department and an independent inquiry promised by Mr. Cook which will make its findings public.

In the face of repeated denials that there were any official contacts between the foreign office and the security firm, Sandline released a letter sent to Mr. Cook on April 24 detailing contacts with senior Foreign Office and Ministry of Defence officials. It even claimed a helicopter used in the coup which overthrew Johnny Paul Koroma was repaired onboard a British warship.

In the letter, it said that Britain's High Commissioner to Sierra Leone, Peter Penfold, had suggested that Mr. Kabbah approach Sandline to supply guns for the coup.

The U.S. State Department was also claimed to have given its support for the operation, in which 30 tonnes of guns and ammunition were flown from Bulgaria in February to local forces in Sierra Leone. This was later denied by Washington but a State Department spokesman said Washington had urged London to take initiatives to provide logistic support for the Nigerian-led ECOMOG force which finally overthrew Mr. Koroma.

The arms-to-Sierra Leone affair already threatens to claim the scalp of Mr. Cook's number two, Tony Lloyd, who has admitted misleading parliament over when he became aware of the allegations of the illegal arms sales.

Mr. Cook said Saturday "I have nothing to hide and I am determined that there will be no hiding place for the facts." He also repeated that no ministers had any discussions or contact with Sandline.

But Sandline protested in its letter to Mr. Cook that it had been involved in the operation "quite openly and with the full prior knowledge and approval of her majesty's government."

The letter named four foreign office officials said to have been briefed by the company. The man who first raised the alarm over the affair, Liberal Democrat Lord Avebury, said it seemed there was a "conspiracy by senior civil servants" to keep ministers ignorant of what was going on.

He maintained that both Mr. Lloyd and his ministerial colleague Baroness Symons were kept in the dark.

Former Conservative Foreign Secretary Malcolm Rifkind asked: "Who's in charge of the Foreign Office. Is it the Foreign Office diplomats or is it the Foreign Secretary?" He added: "I do not find it easy to believe that... ministers themselves were not being kept informed of what was going on."

Labour MP Dianne Abbott wants Mr. Lloyd to appear again before MPs to say whether or not he finds it strange that in a government with a so-called ethical foreign policy, civil servants do not keep ministers informed on such issues.

Prime Minister Tony Blair has already said there will be disciplinary action against any official or minister found guilty of breaching U.N. resolutions.

Pakistani Christians file past body of bishop in tense hometown

LAHORE, Pakistan (AFP) — A steady stream of Pakistani Christians Saturday paid last respects to Catholic Bishop John Joseph, who committed suicide in protest at the death sentence imposed on a fellow Christian under the country's blasphemy law.

Joseph's body lay in state at the Cathedral of St. Peter and Paul in his hometown of Faisalabad in Punjab province, where he will be laid to rest Sunday.

Pakistan ordered an inquiry into the suicide. Joseph shot himself in the temple with a pistol in the town of Sahiwal outside a court which nine days earlier had condemned the Christian to death.

Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif, in a message of condolences to the bishop's family, voiced his "deep grief."

Amid simmering anger in the Islamic republic's minority community, five Christians began a hunger strike in front of the provincial assembly in Punjab's capital Lahore.

The strikers, belonging to the Christian League, sat under posters demanding the repeal of the blasphemy law, which minorities say has been abused by Muslim extremists to harass and victimise them.

Hundreds of Christian missionary schools remained closed in Punjab for a second day and special services were held in churches for the bishop.

Witnesses said a major security operation was in force in Faisalabad following clashes Friday in the city, the country's third most populous, between police and Christian demonstrators.

Armed police roamed the streets. Markets and private and government establishments were open but were much quieter than normal in the charged atmosphere, witnesses added.

Police said a militant Sunni Muslim group, Sipah-i-Sahaba, threatened demonstrations in Faisalabad over the tearing down of a board bearing a fundamental Islamic tenet, Kalima, during Friday's Christian procession with Joseph's coffin.

Some groups armed with sticks emerged onto the streets overnight but were chased away by security forces before they could attack Christian citizens or property, police sources said.

Christian organisations have vowed to continue the struggle for which Joseph gave his life. He said in a message published by a newspaper after his death that "sacrifices" were needed to achieve the goal.

Leader of Pakistan's Christian National Party, Joseph Francis, said in Lahore it had become "impossible for Christians to live a secure and honourable life" in the face of "religious fanaticism" and abuse of laws.

The Pakistani prime minister said he regretted that Joseph, "instead of following the course of law decided to act otherwise."

Asserting that the constitution guarantees full freedom and rights to minorities, Mr. Sharif said he hoped the incident would not harm relations between Christians and Muslims.

Members of a Commission for Justice and Peace, which was founded by Joseph, criticised state-run television for blacking out news about the bishop.

The blasphemy law, under which 25-year-old Ayub Masih was convicted last month for allegedly uttering insulting remarks about the Prophet Muhammad, was enacted by then-military ruler

Muhammed Zia ul Haq in 1985.

So far no one has been executed and Masih can appeal to the High Court within 30 days.

In 1995 a lower court sentenced to death a 14-year-old Christian, Salamati Masih, and his uncle Rehmat Masih for blasphemy. A High Court later acquitted them but threats reportedly forced them to quietly leave the country.

Christians, four per cent of the 140 million population in Pakistan, and other minorities have demanded the blasphemy law be amended to provide safeguards against false complaints.

Then-Premier Benazir Bhutto tried to amend the law in 1995 following concerns from some Western countries. But she had to shelve the plan after religious groups launched strikes and demonstrations.

The Nation newspaper said in an editorial the suicide "is certain to send negative signals to an already sceptical West about Pakistan's legal system and the condition of the minorities."

The paper called for procedural amendments to the law to prevent its abuse.

Beijing outraged at Japanese film on occupation of China

BEIJING (AFP) — China expressed outrage Saturday at a new Japanese film entitled "Pride, an Instant in a Lifetime," which deals with the trial and last days of the often-reviled wartime General Hideki Tojo.

"Hideki Tojo was the chief criminal of the war of aggression. We feel shocked and indignant over the fact that some people in Japan produced such a movie to whitewash aggression and sing the praises of Hideki Tojo," Chinese foreign ministry spokesman Zhu Bangzao said.

"It is known to all that during World War II, the war of aggression waged by the Japanese militarists inflicted great suffering... the crimes committed are proved by a mass of iron-clad and irrefutable evidence and a just verdict was reached by the international community long ago," he added.

Hideki Tojo, named prime minister on Oct. 10, 1941, threw Japan into war with the United States on Dec. 7, 1941, with a surprise attack on the U.S. naval base at Pearl Harbour.

He was executed by hanging at age 64 in November 1948 after being condemned to death for war crimes, with six other Japanese leaders.

The court was similar to the Nuremberg trials organised by the allies to try Nazi war criminals.

Making such a film "is bound to be strongly condemned by people who face up to history and love peace," Mr. Zhu said.

Building on human gesture

THE RELEASE last week of Jordanian prisoners from Kuwaiti jails was a happy event and a source of fresh hope in an otherwise troubled region.

From a human perspective, the release ended the agony of families long divided and meant that the six prisoners who returned Thursday can finally enjoy normal lives as promising students and serious professionals.

From the point of view of international principles and jus cogens, it signals that governments are becoming increasingly aware that people cannot be jailed for their political opinions.

From a political point of view, the release of Jordanian prisoners from Kuwaiti jails reflects the two countries' determination to restore full diplomatic ties and resume their friendship in the spirit of Arab brotherhood.

At a time when Israel keeps denying the Palestinians their rights and puts the whole peace process in jeopardy, the Arab and Muslim countries of the Middle East should put aside their minor, and major, differences and stand united behind the cause of peace.

The prisoners' release follows on the heels of the historic release of around 5,000 Iraqis from Iranian jails and around 300 Iraqis from Iraqi jails in recent weeks.

It is unfortunate that Iraq and Iran would still be holding prisoners of war (PoWs) 10 years after the war between them ended. Combatants should not pay with their lives for wars that they did not initiate themselves. Governments should not use human beings to settle accounts or to strike bargains. Most PoWs are simply soldiers who come from all sorts of professions and who carry out somebody else's orders, men with families, wives and children waiting for them at home. Many of them did not join their armies out of conviction, but were forced to do so by economic needs, unemployment or conscription laws. Even if conflicts and differences between governments are not settled, it is shameful to punish individuals for something for which they are not responsible.

ARABIC PRESS COMMENTARIES

Al Ra'i's Muness Razzaz discussed the outcome of the London meeting which he said demonstrated that Israel is the only country in the world that possesses the power to say "no" to the American empire. In the Arab World Lebanon is the only Arab country that is able to say "no" to Netanyahu while the other Arab states lack the will to acquire such power. He said it is a question of will power and resolve that can defeat the enemy's ambitions. It was only when Israel began to suffer from the blows dealt to its army by the Hizbollah resistance group of Lebanon that its leaders decided to withdraw from the occupied south, he said. The writer said that it was only when Sadat launched a war on Israel in 1973 inflicting heavy losses on the Israelis that the Israeli leaders accepted the idea of withdrawing from Sinai. Netanyahu is pushing Arafat gradually into the lap of Hamas and by so doing he is creating a climate for violence in the region, said the writer who added that the Arabs have the power to say "no" if they are really determined to regain their rights.

Al Arab Al Yawm's Riyadh Hroub criticised the government for lacking economic plans that would guarantee real development. In industry Jordan is still very weak and its production is very modest, in mineral resources only the Dead Sea and phosphate constitute the main sources of income, but these two are still modest and the country lacks major industries to ensure sufficient revenues, and in agriculture the country is still backward and the farmers still suffer from a million ills, according to the writer. He said in the 1970s the government announced and carried out socio-economic schemes and many of these schemes yielded good results and the public was satisfied to see industrial projects emerging, dams built and mines opened. But today it is regrettable to see the government borrowing in order to pay back dues or services on loans or only to finance small size projects that cannot cater to the real requirements of the Kingdom. He said it is not impossible to change the situation and it is not late to undertake very important decisions for the benefit of the country and its future generations.

Sunday's Economic Pulse

Inflation rate '97: It's how you calculate it

IS IT true the inflation rate in 1997 did not exceed three per cent? Why do we feel that the rate could have been as high as double the above figure?

There are several ways to measure inflation in a given year. Among these are the cost of living index, wholesale price index, and deflator of the national accounts. Each one of these indicators is meaningful in a certain situation but misleading in another.

The cost of living index for instance reflects change in the price of a basket of goods and services, which an average Jordanian family consumes, in an average month, while the deflator reflects the overall change of prices of the gross domestic product (GDP). Therefore cost of living index is the right tool to track the reduction of the purchasing power of the JD as far as families are concerned, while deflator is more indicative when we need to compare the volume of GDP in a given year with what it used to be in the preceding year, thus helping us arrive at the real annual growth rate in constant prices. There is a deflator for each category of GDP, such as agriculture, mining, construction, etc., and for GDP as a whole. Deflator covers everything as a weighted average. It includes items that may not be part of the consumer's basket of goods and services, such as the prices of potash, phosphate, fertilisers and civil servants' wages and salaries.

For social and political purposes, the cost of living index is superior, but even this particular indicator can be calculated in various ways yielding different results. If we take the average indices for the 12 months of 1997 and compare it with the average indices of the 12 months of 1996, we arrive at a three per cent inflation rate for 1997. This is the figure currently applied for all official usage. However, if we take the cost of living index in December 1997 and compare it with the cost of living index in December 1996 we arrive at 6.3 per cent as the inflation rate for 1997. I have hardly seen this last figure being used by any economist or analyst.

Which one of these two rates of inflation is more meaningful. In other words: Was inflation in 1997 as low as three per cent or as high as 6.3 per cent? Both figures are correct provided each is accompanied by a definition and explanation of the methodology employed in calculations. Both of the two results are taken from the officially published figures.

The annual average to annual average ratio, i.e., three per cent is correct if we are comparing individual income or GDP as a whole with what they were in the previous year, but the comparison of the price level at a given month with what it used to be in the same month of the previous year tells us what change took place during the past 12 months, irrespective of the situation over the duration of 24 months earlier.

Averages may be of value to economists and statisticians who deal with the aggregate figures of the economy, but as far as private citizens are concerned, they care about change from a year earlier. Thus it is right for the Jordanian people to conclude that the inflation rate in 1997 was 6.3 per cent not three per cent.

Challenging the IMF, intellectually and politically

By Soren Ambrose

WASHINGTON — The International Monetary Fund's (IMF) growing involvement in crisis-ridden East Asia has earned it unprecedented and overdue attention. After decades of quietly designing and overseeing the economic policies of dozens of countries, the IMF has become a hot political issue on Capitol Hill.

Conservatives in Congress mistrust the IMF's willingness to meddle with market forces, bailing investors out of the consequences of their risky bets. Progressives oppose its reliance on trickle down economic policies that invariably favour the interests of multinational corporations and rich foreign investors over poor and middle-class people in poor countries.

Supporters of the IMF, including the leadership of both parties, appear uncomfortable with the growing public debate. They and the Clinton White House have worked hard all spring to avoid any committee hearings or roll call votes on IMF funding — even as President Bill Clinton continues to seek approval of an $18 billion appropriation to bolster the international lending agency over the next three years — a 45 per cent increase in the U.S. commitment to the IMF.

Debate in the House is likely to centre on the IMF's intention to amend its Articles of Agreement to mandate the deregulation of investment capital flows in member countries. Some say such deregulation set off the financial crises in Asia and Mexico.

The fund also faces an unprecedented intellectual challenge from its own ranks.

The most prominent and outspoken of the IMF's critics is the Harvard Professor Jeffrey Sachs, who advised the governments of Bolivia, Poland and Russia as they implemented IMF economic restructuring programmes in the 1970s and '80s. Mr. Sachs now opposes IMF policies to revive East Asian economies.

The recent crisis, he argues in the March-April issue of The American Prospect magazine, is "a financial panic made in the private sector" that the IMF at first ignored and then made worse.

He notes that in the months before the East Asian collapse, the IMF had expressed great confidence in the Asian economies, citing their "sound fundamentals" such as budget surpluses, high savings rates, low inflation and export-oriented industries.

Once the dependence of these countries on short-term foreign debt became apparent, panic set in, Asian currency values plunged and the IMF stepped in with its standard prescription: layoffs, higher interest rates and the opening of local economies to international investors.

As a result, Mr. Sachs notes, a "wave of bankruptcies is sweeping Korea, and a massive rise in unemployment seems set to hit all three of the economies" — Thailand, Indonesia and South Korea.

The IMF's own records bear out Mr. Sachs's criticism. Over the past 18 years, the IMF has required more than 80 countries in extreme debt distress to adopt its Structural Adjustment Programmes. To get access to IMF financing, governments must subscribe to the "Washington consensus," meaning they are effectively required to cut government spending on health and education, devalue their currencies, raise interest rates and allow foreign ownership of domestic businesses.

If the enforced austerity of "structural adjustment" truly led to higher standards of living for the majority of the people in IMF client countries, the pain inflicted might be acceptable. But an internal study, completed by the IMF staff in September 1997, found that per capita income stagnated in countries undergoing structural adjustment from 1981 to 1995.

In developing countries free of the IMF, the study found that per capita income rose.

The technical language of these reports translates into shocking hardship for many. The classic case is Mexico, sometimes described as an IMF success.

In 1982, it became apparent that Mexico could not pay its foreign debts. The IMF put together a "rescue package" and, for the next decade, the Mexican government followed the IMF's standard policy prescriptions. But real income fell from 1982 to 1992. Infant deaths due to malnutrition tripled. The real minimum wage lost more than half its value, and the percentage of the population living in poverty increased from just under one-half to about two-thirds of Mexico's 87 million people.

In 1994, Mexico was again hit by financial crisis, as the risks of growth financed by short-term foreign investment became plain. The government was forced to devalue the peso, and foreign investors stampeded to withdraw their money. To reassure global financial markets, the IMF put together another bailout plan, since the plan's adoption, 20,000 small and medium-sized businesses — one-third of Mexico's commercial enterprises — have gone bankrupt and two million people have lost their jobs.

Perhaps the most surprising new critic of the IMF is Joseph Stiglitz, the chief economist at the World Bank. The World Bank, which finances development projects such as dams and power plants in poor countries, is the IMF's sister institution.

In January, Mr. Stiglitz told The Wall Street Journal that the IMF bailout conditions in East Asia might cause a "severe recession" by imposing unnecessary austerity measures.

It is time to face up to the damage that has been wreaked by the IMF. The IMF's managing director, Michel Camdessus, recently acknowledged to a group of U.S. church leaders that realising the benefits of the IMF's macroeconomic model might require the "sacrifice of a generation." Congress should take the opportunity to abandon such cynicism and reject the additional $18 billion for the IMF. Just as democratic governments long ago recognised that war was too important to be left to the generals, the economies of the world are far too important to be left to the economists at the IMF.

The writer is on the steering committee of the 50 Years Is Enough Network, a coalition of more than 200 U.S. organisations dedicated to the fundamental transformation of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank.

Asia needs social protections

RECENT EVENTS in Asia, including the dramatic financial crisis in Thailand, have shown how powerfully and swiftly a major economic shock can be translated into a major social crisis. They have also shown how the IMF's policy of "sound fundamentals" such as budget surpluses, high savings rates, low inflation and export-oriented industries, can lead to a financial panic made in the private sector that the IMF at first ignored and then made worse.

He notes that in the months before the East Asian collapse, the IMF had expressed great confidence in the Asian economies, citing their "sound fundamentals" such as budget surpluses, high savings rates, low inflation and export-oriented industries.

U.S. Jewish leaders assuaged

To the editor:

AGAINST THE backdrop of no less than 81 U.S. senators 9out of 100) who signed a letter to President Bill Clinton warning him against pressuring the Israeli leadership, perhaps it was predictable that Secretary Madeleine Albright would run home from the London conference and immediately reassure the Jewish leaders in America that the administration would not "dictate" policy to Israel, and that "nothing will ever change the relationship of the United States with Israel." These two statements, it seems, would be sufficient to undo anything positive that might have been achieved at the London conference.

It has been obvious, since the inception of Benjamin Netanyahu's reign, that he has hoodwinked the American leadership, and has no fear of outright defiance of any suggestion that he should make some shifts in his policies. If there were any suspicion that America would for once come out with a courageous position and demand that Israel respect international law, this was quickly squelched by Ms. Albright in her subsequent statements. It is quite clear that America cannot "dictate" policy to Israel at this point, after spoiling her for decades with unquestioned support. The hypocrisy of this position is that it is American support for Israel, material and moral, that has allowed Israel to "dictate" her own policy of repression and exploitation in the region, regardless of world opinion.

Of course Mr. Netanyahu can go to Washington now and continue the charade of "negotiations, peace talks, blab, blah, blah, knowing the whole time that he doesn't have to give up anything. In fact, he could probably get away with a total withdrawal from the peace process, and meet with only upraised eyebrows from the American leadership.

As for the statement "nothing will ever change the relationship between America and Israel," we heard Vice President Al Gore parrot this same statement last week in Israel, as has every U.S. leader since Harry Truman. This is politics and vote grabbing in its most reprehensible form, and only stokes the convictions of people like Mr. Netanyahu, making real peace with justice a more remote possibility.

A regular e-reader

To the editor:

I READ Ms. Alia A. Toukan's article "Syrian-Israeli talks would have led to Golan withdrawal — Savir" (Jordan Times, May 6) with great interest.

It has always been my contention that Syria could have recovered the entire Golan Heights in return for a total peace treaty and complete normalisation of relations with Israel. But because Syria was unwilling to even consider a comprehensive peace accord, the deal fell through. Total responsibility for this failure must be attributed to Syria.

This was not the first time that Israel offered Syria a total withdrawal.

Immediately after the 1967 war Israel agreed to relinquish the entire Golan as well as the Gaza Strip and the West Bank for a comprehensive pact similar to the present Jordanian-Israeli agreement. Syria rejected it then as well as in 1995.

Two 'problems'

To the editor:

AS A VOLUNTEER working in Jordan over the past 11 months, I find your excellent newspaper to be essential daily reading for its coverage of both national affairs and the ramifications of the Arab/Israeli tensions. However, I must take issue with statements in your last two issues.

In a report on the Wadi Mousa wastewater plant you refer to "26 existing hotels with 2,700 beds in the area, and it is predicted that by the year 2010 there will be approximately 40 hotels with 4,000 beds." Personal observation and questioning of a local hotel owner and a tour guide have both indicated that there are already some 64 hotels.

Secondly, I find an item in your "Society on the Move" (May 7-8) to be defamatory in describing most of Amman's taxi drivers as "inconsiderate thugs." As an inevitably frequent user of taxis (and buses), nothing could be further from my experience. Apart from the occasional altercation at Abdali and Aqaba Ferry Terminal late at night over fare levels, I am pleased to say that, like your reporter, I have found them to be most helpful and certainly not "thugs."

Like your reporter, I have also experienced invaluable assistance from one driver when I returned to my apartment late one evening to find that my bank and credit cards were not in my wallet. I was just about to telephone my card agency in the U.K. to report the loss and stop all transactions when there was a ring on my door bell and I found my apartment porter with the taxi driver. He had taken the trouble to track me down to return the cards which he had found in his taxi after they had fallen from my wallet when I came to pay the fare.

No Sir. Like nearly all the Jordanian people that I have had the privilege to meet during my stay here, bus and taxi drivers are courteous, kind and generous — as well as being eager to practise their English on a foreign visitor!

Following a statement by European Commission President Romano Prodi on the occasion of Europe Day, May 9.

MANY YEARS ago people used to refer to the so-called "bicycle theory" of European integration. The principle of the theory was that integration depended on momentum: as the momentum increased, the bicycle would keep the path of the bicycle stable. Stop the path of the bicycle, however, and the bicycle would fall off. Life does not always go according to the bicycle theory, however. One does not necessarily fall off a stopped bicycle. Nothing prevents you from pushing one foot down for balance, drawing breath and pushing off again with more energy, and perhaps a little more carefully about the direction of the ride. So it is with European integration. At the beginning of the present century, our view was that we should concentrate on ensuring that what we do is done more effectively. Basically, we have been endeavouring to ensure that we have digested the implications of the Maastricht Treaty on European Union (EU) and to ensure that the 1998 Intergovernmental Conference took account of the commission's new proposals for improvements in existing policies and procedures. The point was to prepare the EU for the new challenges of the international system.

And, indeed, there have been far-reaching changes in the world since 1989 and we have not yet seen the end of them. The confrontation between the Soviet Union and the free world has come to an end, leaving behind a radically changed international scene, where international actors are still trying to find their place. Some have argued that we have seen the end of history and the triumph of the market economy and liberal democracy. Other argue that we are heading for a conflict of civilisations closely resembling a war of religions. All these ideas are interesting. But let us look at things from a more practical angle. I want to mention two challenges: to the EU in this celebration of Europe Day 1998.

The first challenge is to fulfil the role we are expected to play on the world stage. The second is the enormous challenge of making a success of the EURO, the single European currency which is now formally in existence.

I start from two assumptions: First, the union's action on the international scene and its success in establishing the new EURO as a major international currency is a test of European identity. It is one of the essential factors which will allow Europeans to identify with the common venture in which their countries are involved.

Today not only the peoples of the union clearly believe that we do not carry the political weight we could and should carry, but many of Europe's international partners feel the same. In one extreme version, this translates as the union being branded a political dwarf, despite the fact of its giant status as an economic force in the world.

My second assumption is that there is a crying need for a strong union on the international scene. The EU cannot be an island of stability in a sea of poverty and crises. This would neither be compatible with Europe's values nor consistent with Europe's interests and, importantly, with the interests of our partners. In the Middle East, in Asia, in Eastern Europe, in the Balkans, we need a confident union working with other partners.

The EU does matter. But it can and must do more. This means making better use of the instruments it has developed over the years.

The transformation of the post-cold war international scene is marked by a shift in the weight of the conventional large degree of internationalisation in the area in which the state was so far the sole actor within its borders.

This transformation of international relations opens up entirely new prospects for the EU, new opportunities to influence world events, to achieve progress in human rights, to prevent conflicts of all kinds, to advocate a balanced globalisation which will benefit all, to promote the inclusion of developing countries in world trade.

This transformation is, at the same time, a challenge to Europeans to

Palestinians show great interest in Jordanian products on display in Gaza

GAZA CITY (Petra) — Products by 40 Jordanian firms Saturday went on display at the first Jordanian trade fair which was opened under the patronage of Palestinian President Yasser Arafat.

The opening ceremony was attended by representatives of Jordanian business and industrial organizations as well as the board chairman of the Jordan Trade Association (JTA), Bassam Saket. Jordan's representative at the Palestine National Authority (PNA), Ziyad Majali, and other officials.

The Jordanian products on display include cosmetics, scent, chemical and metal manufactured goods, detergents, food stuffs and electric appliances.

Ahu Ali Shahin, the PNA minister of supply, indicated that the Palestinians yearn for increased economic and trade relations with Arab states to help offset the present domination of Israeli goods in Palestinian markets.

The Palestinian markets prefer to strengthen their links with those of the Arab World but the Israelis are standing in the way and placing obstacles in the path of free trade exchanges and smooth export/import operations, Mr. Shahin said.

Praising the high quality of the Jordanian products, Mr. Shahin demanded that Jordanian trade fairs continue and stressed that the Palestinians would like to see an economic peace between Palestine and the Arab World rather than with the Jewish state.

Palestine Monetary Fund (PMF) Governor Fuad Bseiso praised the high quality of the Jordanian products and described them as a source of pride for the Arab Nation stressing that Jordanian goods can compete with similar products from advanced countries.

He expressed hope to see Jordanian products finding their way to Palestinian markets and replacing the Israeli ones. "Jordanian goods are closer to the Palestinian people's taste than others," he emphasized.

Expressing optimism that the peace process will take its course despite the obstacles laid by Israel, Dr. Bseiso called for an amendment to the Palestinian-Israeli economic agreements which he described as obstructing Palestinian development.

Dr. Bseiso said the PMF had signed agreements with the Central Bank of Jordan on regulating the banking procedures between the two sides.

He added that currently eight Jordanian banks have branches in the West

Jordan gold market loses JD145m in 6 months

By Ahmad Kreishan
Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN — Jordan gold market suffered a JD145 million loss within six months following after the fluctuation and drop in gold prices.

Ghaleb Sakijha, secretary of the Jewellers Association, said: "We in the Kingdom have 70 tonnes of gold worth JD 600 million. At current prices, the gold is worth about JD455 million."

Mr. Sakijha added that gold prices dropped at the end of last year and the beginning of 1998 affecting the demand for gold and causing a stagnation in the Jordanian gold market.

Mr. Sakijha noted that due to the excessive supply in world markets, the prices of gold was declined internationally.

Haddadin discusses scopes of cooperation with Bulgarian team

AMMAN (Petra) — Former Bulgarian Prime Minister Reneta Injova Sunday held talks with Munther Haddadin, minister of water and irrigation and acting minister of trade, industry and supply, on scopes of cooperation in economic and trade fields.

Ms. Injova reviewed with Dr. Haddadin aspects of promoting joint investments, exchange of goods, and encouraging technical and technological cadres to visit Bulgaria which is moving towards market economy.

The minister voiced Jordan's readiness to increase its exports to Bulgaria, particularly of phosphates, potash and agricultural products.

The visiting 20-member Bulgarian delegation expressed their satisfaction for the great developments being achieved under the leadership of his Majesty King Hussein.

Dr. Haddadin said the delegation also asked for a copy of the Jordanian economic legislations in order to examine and to make use of them in the Bulgarian economic system.

He added that they voiced their readiness to establish an economic Bulgarian centre in Amman whose main objectives will be to provide investors and economists with information about economic conditions in Bulgaria.

On the other hand, Arab Bulgarian Chambers of Trade and Industry President Jihad Salem said that Jordan will also establish an information centre in Bulgaria whose job will be to spread information about the region and to enhance trade exchange.

"We have agreed with the Ministry of Industry, Trade and Supply to launch joint exhibitions and arranged a schedule for Jordanian investors to visit Bulgaria," said Mr. Salem.

Indonesia faces 'severe, prolonged' downturn — OECD

PARIS (AFP) — Indonesia faces a "severe and prolonged" economic downturn if it does not take timely action to reform its economy, while other South East Asian countries are suffering a spillover effect due to falling trade and a general worsening of investor sentiment towards the region.

"In most of these countries, recovery may not begin before next year, and it could take longer in the most severe cases," the OECD said.

South Korea, the only country directly involved in the financial crisis to be an OECD member, will see its economy shrink by 0.2 per cent this year, but return to growth of 4.0 per cent in 1999.

In Indonesia "the downturn is likely to be especially severe and prolonged without timely actions being taken by the authorities," the OECD said.

It forecast that the Indonesian economy will shrink 8.5 per cent this year, and grow just 2.0 per cent in 1999, after growing 4.7 per cent in 1997. Thailand will fare better because it responded to the crisis with "prompt and vigorous policy actions," but gross domestic product (GDP) will shrink 1.5 per cent this year after contracting 0.4 per cent in 1997, before returning to growth of 4.5 per cent in 1999, the report said.

"The prospects for a sustained recovery depend upon the authorities' ability to maintain the viability of the banking sector and to restrain growth in public spending," it added.

China "faces a difficult task in sustaining real growth this year," and will need to give a significant boost to consumer spending and capital investment, the report said.

"This task has become more difficult due to the marked decline in foreign direct inflows, much of which come from other Asian countries."

From next year onwards, prospects for growth in China "depend critically and increasingly on the government's success in reforming the state-owned enterprise sector and repairing the badly weakened financial position of banks."

OECD chief economist Ignazio Visco nonetheless welcomed the fact that the Beijing government is considering changes in the "real economy" to address its problems, rather than "short-term changes" through devaluing the yuan.

Hong Kong should be in a position to stage "a moderate recovery" in 1999, but "there are serious downside risks, particularly if China were to devalue its currency or if bad loans to the property sector or to other Asian crisis countries turned out to be greater than now expected."

Malaysia also faces "serious risks," the report said, although its economy will continue to grow, with GDP rising 1.4 per cent this year and 3.5 per cent in 1999, although this is far slower than last year's growth of 7.8 per cent.

"The fall in external demand from other Asian countries along with accumulating financial strains

HOROSCOPE

FORECAST FOR SUNDAY, MAY 10, 1998

By Linda C. Black, Tribune Media Services, Inc.

ARIES: (March 21 to April 19) Because you so often volunteer, people sometimes think you can do everything. But if you do, how will the others ever learn to take care of themselves? It's really to their benefit for you to back off a bit. Make that your excuse for taking it easy tonight.

TAURUS: (April 20 to May 20) You and an older relative may not agree on anything except that you disagree. Neither of you wants to be dominated, so you're playing games to prevent that from happening. If you do it on purpose, it could almost be fun. If you're doing it covertly, it'll be painful. The choice is yours.

GEMINI: (May 21 to June 21) Lend a hand again this morning. A friend who's under stress could use one. You can help not only emotionally, but physically. The work is not in your area of expertise, but don't let that stop you. Any assistance you can provide would be greatly appreciated.

CANCER: (June 22 to July 21) Which item should buy, the special one or the one you can afford? You're in love with both, of course. You do seem to be getting more successful in your career, so more money should be coming soon. But as you well know, it's best to have it in your account before you spend it. Proceed with caution.

LEO: (July 22 to August 21) Plan to take it slow and easy. That'll be happening whether you plan for it or not. If it's a really beautiful day, you may decide just to go for a long walk with your sweetheart. The two of you will be able to agree on that, if nothing else.

VIRGO: (August 22 to September 22) Your significant other wants something you can't really afford, but you can figure out how to make it happen. If you don't have a significant other, the same scenario could apply to something you want for yourself. Study the situation carefully before making your request.

LIBRA: (September 23 to October 22) Pay back money you borrowed from a partner. This person probably hasn't asked for it, but even offering to pay will make a really good impression. It'll be hard to make contact with a loved one this afternoon. Schedule your date for the evening instead.

SCORPIO: (October 23 to November 21) You're in the mood for love — the slightly dangerous kind. That would be with someone you find both exciting and frustrating. Forget about who won or lost the last time you played this game and see if this person wants to go another round. You'll both have a great time.

SAGITTARIUS: (November 22 to December 21) The better you can handle a big job, the better you feel about yourself. By doing something you said you'd do, you're reaping rewards you couldn't have anticipated and making a good impression on someone you love. Have a great time while you're at it.

CAPRICORN: (December 22 to January 20) One person wants you to do this, another wants you to do that. You're just too popular. You can solve this problem by bawling everyone over to your house. This could be kind of costly, but nowhere near as expensive as what they had in mind. Fire up the barbecue!

AQUARIUS: (January 21 to February 19) An older person and a younger one are vying for your attention. Give it to the older one first. He or she has valuable advice for you, as well as emotional support. You hate to admit you need it, but it's nice to get some comforting, especially if you're not getting something else you want.

PISCES: (February 20 to March 20) There could be money coming in today. If you have anything to sell, race over to the swap meet. Or perhaps you have an old car you'd like to get rid of. Opportunities like this don't come everyday, so you'd better jump on it like a big dog.

Jordan National Bank boosts net profit by 39 per cent in 1997

** ONE YEAR after the merger between the Jordan National Bank (JNB) and the Business Bank, the new entity, which retained the name of Jordan National Bank, posted a JD32.9 million in gross earnings compared to JD20.6 million during the year preceding the merger. Interest and commission accounted for 88 per cent of the earnings with the remaining 12 per cent coming from foreign exchange, profits generated by the securities portfolio and other income.

The gross profit recorded by JNB at the end of last year amounted to JD10.3 million compared to JD8.6 million before the merger. After deducting taxes and various provisions, the bank's net profit stood at JD5.3 million (JD3.8 million before the merger) of the net profit, JD1.4 million was allocated to the voluntary reserve and JD0.7 million to the statutory reserve.

The profit and loss statement and the balance sheet were approved by the general assembly which also endorsed the recommendation of the board of directors to distribute dividends at a rate of seven per cent. The distribution is equivalent to a 15.75 per cent to JNB shareholders before the merger and to seven per cent for the shareholders of the Business Bank.

The annual report showed the total of the balance sheet at JD756.93 million. By including off-balance accounts, the total became JD913.25 million. At the end of Nov. 30, 1996 the figures were JD443.5 million and JD525.5 million respectively. Shareholders' equity increased to around JD70 million, net credit facilities extended totalled JD361.4 million and deposits of clients rose to JD600.9 million.

Board chairman Rajae Muasher told the general assembly that the bank's capital adequacy ratio was 17.72 at the end of last year. This ratio far exceeds the Basle Committee requirement of eight per cent and the 12 per cent ratio specified by the Central Bank of Jordan.

Dr. Muasher concluded by noting that the bank is currently working on expanding its network in Lebanon, the Palestinian territories and Yemen (Al Ra'i + Ad Dustour + Al Aswaq + Al Arab Yawm).

Royal Jordanian to replace TriStar aircraft with Airbus on operational lease basis

By Ghaila Alul
Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — Debt-burdened Royal Jordanian (RJ) will sell its five ageing TriStar aircraft and replace them with a new generation of European A-310 and A-320 Airbus as part of efforts to modernise its fleet and boost its global network.

The whole process of selling the TriStars and leasing the Airbus will be completed in a year, Nader Dahabi, the airline's president and chief executive officer, told a news conference.

The sale of the five aircraft to the American TransAir Incorporation will help increase RJ's operational profits which stood at $11.9 million in 1997 — a healthy increase over 1996 figures of $3.6 million, he added.

"The sale of the five TriStars operating on the Far East and North America routes will be carried out in several stages. Three aircraft will be sold in June, July and December of 1998, and the remaining two in January and April 1999," said Mr.

Dahabi. He said the sale of the five TriStars will save the company between $27 to $30 million annually in differences between the per hour flying costs of the two types of aircraft.

He did not mention any figures for the sale of the five and the expected cost of lease on an operational basis for the four new aircraft, saying that RJ had not yet signed a sale contract with the American company.

"But given the continued political tension in the region and the Asian economic crisis, we got a good price in comparison with the current international prices for such aircraft," said Mr. Dahabi.

In 1996, RJ paid the final instalment on the $60 million TriStar aircraft leased for the past 10 years from Banque Indosuez. The five TriStars were the only aircraft owned by RJ which has a fleet of 17 aircraft.

"This time, RJ does not intend to purchase the new Airbus at the end of the lease period to avoid their worn out," said Mr. Dahabi.

"This lease is called operational lease, whereby the Airbus will go back to the owner by the end of the lease period. Unlike the capital lease when RJ had to purchase the five TriStar aircraft after the lease period was over," according to Mr. Dahabi.

After the sale is concluded, about 20 to 30 flight engineers who operate the TriStars will be transferred to the airline's training centres and maintenance department or to other Arab airline companies in need of their skills, said Mr. Dahabi.

He added that the sale of the five aircraft will be consistent with RJ's plans to restructure and privatise its operations by turning the national carrier into a company that operates on a commercial basis.

Mr. Dahabi said a subsidiary company will eventually be established to take responsibility of all airline's core functions. A shareholding company will be responsible for all non-core business units such as duty free, catering and training.

"The sale of the TriStars will encourage the strategic partner to join the operating subsidiary company that will have a lesser number and types of aircraft," said Mr. Dahabi.

He said legal and financial advisors will be selected next month to implement a World Bank blueprint for a five-stage privatisation programme, expected to be completed by 1999.

Five global investment banks have submitted bids to act as financial advisors to help the government privatise the state carrier. RJ bankers said Thursday.

They said Citibank, Chase Manhattan, Paribas, Credit Lyonnais and Merrill Lynch responded to RJ's invitation last March to 12 global banks to submit expressions of interest by May 4 to act as financial advisors.

Company officials said they also received responses from eight international legal firms among 14 approached at the same time to act in parallel with the financial advisor as legal consultants to the government.

The financial and legal restructuring of the airline will help put it on a more profitable and a sounder administrative level before it can operate on commercial basis.

RJ operations are currently heavily subsidised by the government.

"Privatisation of RJ does not mean that the airline plans to layoff some of its employees," said Mr. Dahabi. "We, however, try not employing new staff."

Plans to privatise the airline, saddled with debts of over $846 million, were first floated in 1988 but held back due to a host of bureaucratic and financial reasons.

With reference to RJ's plans to strengthen its regional network, Mr. Dahabi said the national air carrier will increase to three its weekly flights to Kuwait and as of mid-June, will resume direct flights to Tehran after an 18-year suspension in order to encourage religious tourism.

Government to award major power project in October

By Mohammad Ben Hussein
Special to the Jordan Times

AMMAN — The government is expected to award a $500 million project to build, own and operate (BOO) a power generation plant in northern Jordan by end of the year, an official said Saturday.

Ahmad Bashir, Secretary General at the Ministry of Energy and Natural Resources, said the project's terms of reference (TOR) will be completed later this month after the ministry qualified 11 international companies.

The 300-450 megawatt project, the first such to be run by the private sector after parliament endorsed a law ending state monopoly on electricity generation in 1996, will help cover an expected seven per cent rise in annual demand on electricity consumption between the year 2002 and 2005.

Work on the project will begin in late 1999.

"We expect to choose the winning company that will execute the project by late October," added Mr. Bashir.

The ministry will also select a consultant to assess the offers and negotiate with the winning company.

The project will be commissioned in 2001.

Mr. Bashir listed the 11 qualified companies as — ABB Energy Ventures B.V. (Netherlands) with SNAM (Italy) and Amoco (USA) — AES Corporation (USA) — Ansaldo Energia (Italy) with ENEL (Italy) — Bechtel Enterprises International Ltd. (U.K.) — CEA International (U.K.) — Enron (USA) with Mitsubishi (Japan) — El Paso Energy (USA) with Black & Veatch (USA) — National Power PLC (U.K.) — South Energy Incorporated (USA) and Tractebel (Belgium).

Hakkinen takes pole in Spain

BARCELONA (AFP) — World championship leader Mika Hakkinen Saturday swept to his third pole position in five races as the McLaren-Mercedes team continued their domination of the Formula One season at the Spanish Grand Prix.

The Flying Finn denied Scotsman David Coulthard a hat-trick of poles by qualifying 7/10ths of a second faster than his teammate as McLaren again finished qualifying 1-2.

Coulthard, who trails the Finn by three points going into Sunday's race, was unable to match the pace of Hakkinen, who went faster each time he was on the track to claim the fourth pole of his 101-race career.

Two-time world champion Michael Schumacher of Germany was third fastest in his Ferrari but was over 1.5 seconds adrift of Hakkinen's pole-winning time of 1min 20.262secs.

The Benetton duo of Giancarlo Fisichella and Alexander Wurz took the next two places, followed by Irishman Eddie Irvine in the other Ferrari.

Brazilian Rubens Barrichello benefited from a new Ford engine to produce his best qualifying display for the ailing Stewart team and took ninth place on the grid.

Jacques Villeneuve, the defending world champion from Canada, was only 10th fastest in his Williams while his German teammate Heinz-Harald Frentzen was back in 13th spot after a late spin.

Kuerten out of German Open

HAMBURG (AFP) — A double fault cost French Open champion Gustavo Kuerten $47,000 as he threw away the chance of a place in the semi-finals of the Licher German Open.

That sum was the difference in prize money between reaching the quarter-finals or the last four.

The hapless Brazilian's only double-fault of the match came as he led 7-6 in a second set tiebreak against fourth seed Alex Corretja, and after he had held another match point at 6-5 which was lost with a wide forehand.

Corretja survived to level the match and claim a 4-6, 7-6 (10/8), 6-4 victory after a two hour 47-minute struggle.

Corretja faces fellow Spaniard Felix Mantilla in the semi-finals. Ninth-seeded Mantilla benefited from a retirement by 16th seed Goran Ivanisevic, who was suffering from a respiratory infection and quit after losing the first eight games.

The Croatian was found to be suffering from low blood pressure but said afterwards he felt much better.

The other semi-final will pit sixth seed Karol Kucera of Slovakia against the unseeded Albert Costa of Spain. Kucera held off a bright start by the unseeded Thomas Muster to win 6-3, 6-2, and Costa beat unseeded Frenchman Fabrice Santoro 6-3, 6-4.

Fifth-seeded Kuerten claimed the opening set by breaking Corretja to love to lead 5-4, and then broke to lead 1-0 in the second set with a scorching forehand winner down the line.

But the Brazilian dropped his serve from 40-0 to allow Corretja to level at 3-3, and then after saving a set point at 6-5 threw away the chance of victory in the tiebreak.

In the final set, Corretja gained an early break and despite some strong resistance from Kuerten, especially in the final stages, that was enough to settle the outcome.

"I just tried to hit a normal serve," said Kuerten. "It was my only double-fault, and in the third set it kept coming back in my mind. It's a big loss for me and my biggest disappointment this year."

"But every day I'm learning something new, and I have great expectations for Paris."

Muster was unable to maintain an impressive start, in which he led 3-1. "I think I started pretty well," said Muster. "I felt comfortable and had a lot of chances to go ahead 4-1, but lost my concentration and slowed my game down a little bit. My footwork wasn't as aggressive as in the other matches."

"He played very well from when he came back to 3-3. He can wrong-foot you, and he started playing more top-spin, high balls which kept me way behind the baseline. I didn't force enough. I didn't really attack the ball enough to make him rally with me the way I did in the first four of five games."

Kucera, who is coached by Miloslav Mecir and shows many of his graceful properties, admitted that Muster had placed him under early pressure.

The quietly spoken Slovak, who at the beginning of the year won the Hopman Cup and Sydney and was a semi-finalist at the Australian Open, now believes he has a chance of winning the upcoming French Open.

"Everything is possible. I wouldn't say I was the favourite, but I'll try every match and if I play like this for sure I can win the French Open," he insisted.

A single break of serve in each set, for 2-0 in the first and 1-0 in the second, was enough to earn Costa victory over Santoro.

WORLD CUP '98

Djorkaeff is the history man

PARIS (AFP) — Youri Djorkaeff enjoyed a small slice of club history with Inter Milan, but now the French striker wants a mammoth portion by helping the hosts to their first ever World Cup triumph.

Djorkaeff, like many top players, got his appetite for football from his father, Jean, whose own parents were Armenian, played for French first division club Lyon and was capped 48 times by France.

Djorkaeff junior was born and brought up in Lyon, but started his career in 1984 as a 16-year-old with Grenoble in the second division, spending six seasons in the foothills of the Alps.

He had already begun to developing his scoring touch before leaving, but in his first season with Strasbourg (1989-90), Djorkaeff knocked in a remarkable 21 goals in 28 games.

Snapped up by Monaco within a few months of the following season, in December 1990, Djorkaeff spent the next five years in the Principality, scoring 60 times and winning the French Cup in 1992.

His international career also began to take off, and he first caught people's attention in Italy in 1994.

France played the future finalists in a pre-World Cup friendly and Djorkaeff scored the only goal — putting the ball past the man who is now his club teammate, Gianluca Pagliuca.

Djorkaeff eventually left Monaco to join Paris St Germain for a memorable season in 1995-96, when PSG became only the second French club to win a continental trophy as they lifted the European Cup Winners Cup.

Weeks later, he was back on the scoresheet as France reached the semi-finals of the 1996 European championships in England, before bowing out on penalties to the Czech Republic.

Djorkaeff made a promising start to his career in Italy, with 14 league goals in his first season — including an airborne scissor-kick against AS Roma which so impressed his new club that they printed a picture of it over the 1997-98 season tickets.

"I've gone down in Inter history," he said. "And that's something I'm really proud of."

This season, his skills have been barnessed as Ronaldo's strike partner, with mixed results.

"I really want to do well at the World Cup," says Djorkaeff. "There's no point hiding it, it will be the biggest moment of my career."

Michael Laudrup to retire after World Cup

COPENHAGEN (AFP) — Ajax striker Michael Laudrup, one of Denmark's greatest ever players, told Danish television on Friday he would retire from football after the World Cup.

"It's a very difficult decision, but I think it's time to stop and do something else," said Laudrup, who turns 34 on June 15, the week the World Cup starts in France.

"I could have continued for another season, but I wanted to go out at the top," he explained.

Laudrup, who is set to line up alongside his Chelsea-bound brother Brian in the World Cup, has won 97 Danish caps and scored 36 goals.

Over the past 13 years, Laudrup has won a host of major honours with Juventus (one league title and one Intercontinental Cup), Barcelona (four league titles and one European Cup), Real Madrid (one league title) and Ajax (1 league title).

Juninho unhappy at World Cup snub

MADRID (AFP) — Atletico Madrid's Brazilian international Juninho spoke Wednesday of his bitter disappointment at being left out of his country's World Cup squad.

Juninho, who starred in the Premiership with Middlesbrough last season but ironically left for Madrid believing that he would be more visible to coach Mario Zagallo playing in the Spanish, said he had been omitted for "tactical" reasons.

"Anyone who says differently is lying as I have totally recovered," said Juninho, who made his comeback for Atletico on Sunday after a three-month lay-off with a broken leg.

"I did everything I could to be ready to play in the World Cup," said the 25-year-old, who underwent special fitness training following his injury.

And in an apparent swipe at Zagallo he said: "There are certain players who do not maintain good discipline and yet bag all the prizes going. I am going to have to reflect whether it's worth having that discipline or not."

But he insisted his observation was not directed at Fiorentina star Edmundo, who has had several run-ins with Zagallo over disciplinary matters.

Juninho, 25, also said he realised he had to accept the opinion of Zagallo and his staff if they preferred other players to him.

Maldini steps up to the big league

PARIS (AFP) — Cesare Maldini is betting that nearly half a century in football will see him right in his first and last World Cup finals as Italy's coach.

Maldini, 66, got the top job in December 1996 on the strength of his track record at Under-21 level, following Arrigo Sacchi's resignation in the wake of the Italian fiasco at Euro '96.

Now he prepares for his first ever major tournament in the senior hot seat, hoping to repeat the success he once witnessed as Enzo Bearzot's deputy at the 1982 World Cup finals in Spain.

As a player, Maldini enjoyed success at club level with AC Milan, but never really cut it on the international stage.

He spent 12 years with Milan (1954-66), winning the Italian league title four times and becoming the first Italian to hold the European Cup aloft, when his team beat Eusebio's Benfica at Wembley in 1963.

However, he was only capped 14 times by Italy in his whole career and he moved into coaching in 1967, in charge of Milan's youth team.

Maldini took over the top job from 1970-74, as Milan won the Italian Cup twice and the European Cup Winners' Cup once, before finally leaving the club.

After five seasons in the wilderness with Foggia, Ternana and Parma, he joined the national federation in 1980, and took over the Under-21s in 1986.

It proved to be a shrewd move as Maldini guided Italy to three consecutive victories in the European championships — 1992, 1994 and 1996.

He built up a good relationship with the youngsters, several of whom he will be taking to France, and also won the federation's vote when it came to replacing Sacchi.

Maldini's national team, captained by son Paolo, has so far been solid but not sparkling — with seven wins, six draws and one defeat to England. It was good enough to qualify, but they will have to do better in France.

Nilis has the scoring knack for Belgium

PARIS (AFP) — Luc Nilis is the man responsible for Belgium's spot at the 1998 World Cup finals. The 30-year-old PSV Eindhoven spearhead scored twice against the Republic of Ireland in the two-leg European playoffs to seal Belgium's spot and, late in his career, has begun to emerge as an international striker of genuine menace.

Nilis, who started his career with Winterslag, scored more than 100 goals in six seasons with Belgian League powerhouses Anderlecht, but he took four years to score his first goal at international level. It finally came against Zambia.

Now, as he closes in on 50 international appearances, he is likely to be a key figure for a Belgian side that have only once made it past the second round at the World Cup — when they made the semi-finals in 1986.

Some critics say the Belgian team is too old. Supporters say it is battle-hardened.

The strength in depth is obvious, though. Nilis, who scored four qualifying goals in all in just six appearances, is by no means a certain starter as the Belgians start their fifth straight World Cup finals campaign.

Belgian coach Georges Leekens also has to consider Nilis's PSV Eindhoven teammate Gilles de Bilde, Brazilian-born Luis Oliveira and Marc Wilmots for striking berths.

Nilis, who is both powerful and an opportunist, missed the first three months of the current season with an ankle injury but has been in fine form since the new year.

He was a key man as the Red Devils won last year's Dutch league title — scoring 21 goals in the process — and the drop in his supply of goals this season may have played a part in Eindhoven losing the title to Ajax.

Nilis' early season absence could, however, mean he is fresher going into the World Cup finals than many of his rivals. The Belgian fans will certainly be hoping he lives up to nickname of "Lucky Luc" in France.

Hingis starts fast, e

ROME (AFP) — Martina Hingis on Friday preserved her unbeaten record against fellow teenage rival Li Na, winning 6-2, 6-2 in the first round of the Italian Open.

The 17-year-old Hingis, who won the French Open in 1997, started the match with a series of aces and powerful backhands, forcing Li to retreat to the back of the court.

"I knew whether to go for it or not," said Hingis, who is in the semi-finals of the French Open in Paris. "I'm not nervous. I'm just happy to be here."

The top seed known to be a tough opponent, Li, had cracked the Italian match.

"I'm not nervous. I'm just happy to be here," said Hingis, who is in the semi-finals of the French Open in Paris. "I'm not nervous. I'm just happy to be here."

The day's showcase match was between Venus Williams and Serena Williams, who were scheduled to play a semi-final against fifth seed Arantxa Sanchez-Vicario.

The Spaniard wore down Venus, winning 6-7 (6/8), 6-1, 6-2.

"I'm feeling good. I'm playing Venus for the first time this year," said Hingis, who beat Li in January. "I know how she plays. I'll concentrate on my own game. I'm not surprised Williams are playing on clay. They have to play on all surfaces. The difference between the American and the European women were allowed to attend in their own country."

Jordan plays Syria in U-19 Asian Cup qualifiers

By a Jordan Times Staff Reporter

AMMAN — The Kingdom's Under-19 national soccer team Sunday plays its Syrian counterpart on the opening day of Group Two of the 31st Asian Cup qualifiers which conclude in Beirut May 15.

The group also includes the Lebanese and Saudi teams who will meet later in the evening. The four teams will play a one round competition to determine the group winner to the 10-team Asian finals in Bangkok, Thailand in October.

Thirty-nine nations are contesting the preliminary round qualifiers of the event divided into nine groups. The finals will include the top team in each group and the host nation.

Four teams — the top three finalists and the previous Asian champion — will then qualify to the youth World Cup in Nigeria in 1999.

The Jordanian team is just out of a week-long training camp in Egypt, where they won one match and lost another two.

They also had another camp in Baghdad where they drew 0-0 with Baghdad's city team and lost 4-0 to the Iraqi youth team.

Jordan impressive in Cyprus table tennis tourney

AMMAN (J.T.) — Jordan's youth team won the Under-15 Cyprus Table Tennis Tournament after scoring a 3-2 win over Syria and 3-0 over the Cypriot (A) team.

Jordan's team comprising Bara' Abu Ghanmi, Ahmad Awwad, and Rashed Mornani had also beat Syria and Cyprus (B) team 3-0.

In the girl's U-18 competition, Jordan came in second after losing 3-1 to Syria and beating Lebanon 3-0.

Jordan's team of Hadeel Awwad, Zeina Shaban and Lina Majdalawi had also beat Cyprus A and B teams 3-1.

Bulls back on top; Lakers lead Sonics 2-1

CHARLOTTE (AFP) — Michael Jordan returned to his slashing, driving style and scored 27 points as Chicago beat Charlotte 103-89 Friday to regain the upper hand in their National Basketball Association second-round playoff series.

The Bulls, seeking their sixth NBA title in eight years, rebounded from a surprising home defeat in Game Two, taking a 2-1 lead in the best-of-seven Eastern Conference semi-final series.

They regained home-court advantage and avoided falling behind in a playoff series for the first time since 1995.

While Chicago went on the road to put themselves in the driver's seat, there was no place like home for the Los Angeles Lakers, who held off a fourth-quarter rally by Seattle to beat the SuperSonics 119-103 and take a 2-1 lead in their Western Conference semi-final series.

In Charlotte, North Carolina native Jordan thwarted the Hornets' double-teaming strategy by driving to the basket as soon as he received the ball. In Wednesday's Game Two loss, Jordan scored most of his 22 points on jump shots as Charlotte defenders forced him outside.

The difference was reflected at the free-throw line. Jordan went 9-of-10 from the stripe after attempting two foul shots in Game Two. Unlike Wednesday's defeat, Jordan also had a lot of help from his supporting cast.

Scottie Pippen netted 18 points and Dennis Rodman grabbed 17 rebounds to go along with 10 points. It was the fifth straight game in which Rodman has posted double-figure rebounding numbers.

Ron Harper, who had two points in the first two games, helped the Bulls take the crowd out of the game early, scoring all of his eight points in the first quarter as Chicago went ahead from the start and led throughout, except for a half-minute stretch in the opening period.

Charlotte lost at home for the first time this postseason, despite getting 31 points from Glen Rice. Anthony Mason added 16 and seven boards for the Hornets, who were outshot from the field, 51 per cent (35-of-68) to 44 per cent (37-84) and were edged on the boards for the first time this series, 40-35. "I think we played pretty well," Jordan said. "We came in with better focus tonight. We played our game... we did what we had to do."

Bulls coach Phil Jackson gave center Luc Longley the starting nod over Toni Kukoc, Longley, who did not play in the first-round series against New Jersey because of injury, responded with 11 points in 27 minutes.

Kukoc also played 21 minutes and had six points as the Bulls' bench outscored

Charlotte's reserves, 29-13. The bench also aided another stellar defensive effort by Chicago, which held the Hornets under 100 points for the 16th straight time.

Former Bull B.J. Armstrong and teammate Dell Curry, who combined for 25 points in Charlotte's Game Two victory, were invisible. Armstrong scored two points on 1-of-7 shooting while Curry was held scoreless.

Jordan was unruffled by the latest background noise about the future of the Bulls. Bulls Chairman Jerry Reinsdorf was quoted this week as saying he would be inclined to keep the team intact if they do win another title.

Jordan, who maintained earlier this season that it would be his last, has lately waffled on that decision, his fate perhaps still linked to whether Pippen and Bulls coach Phil Jackson return.

"We can't worry about that right now," Jordan said. "Our focus has to be on winning that sixth championship."

"He (Reinsdorf) has the prerogative to say whatever he wants to say. When the season is over, we'll all sit down and evaluate the situation."

Game Four is on Sunday in Charlotte.

In Los Angeles, Shaquille O'Neal scored 11 points in the fourth quarter, including nine in a 16-2 burst that put away the game after Seattle pulled within 94-91 with 6:34 to play. O'Neal finished with 30 points and 11 rebounds.

Eddie Jones scored a play-off career-high 29 points, Nick Van Exel contributed 22 off the bench and Robert Horry added 19 and nine boards for Los Angeles, which never trailed in the second half.

Detlef Schrempf, Gary Payton and Vin Baker rebounded from subpar efforts in Game Two's home loss for Seattle. But Hersey

Hawkins, who has provided a major offensive spark for the SuperSonics throughout the postseason, managed just five points in 30 minutes.

Schrempf, who had just one point in Game Two, scored 26, Payton collected 22 and 13 assists and Baker had 20 points and 12 rebounds, but Seattle was unable to overcome its poor postseason history at the Forum. The Sonics have lost eight straight playoff games there since winning Game One of the 1980 Western Conference finals. The Lakers host Game Four on Sunday.

Hingis starts fast, ends slow to beat Kournikova

ROME (AFP) — Martina Hingis on Friday preserved her unblemished record against fellow teenage rival Anna Kournikova — but the Swiss world number one took no fewer than six match points to reach the semi-finals of the $926,250 Italian Open.

Hingis eventually carved out a 6-2, 6-4 victory over the Russian and move into the semifinals at the Foro Italico.

There she plays either sometimes-sparring partner Mirjana Lucic, 16, of Croatia or French 12th seed Sandrine Testud, who were facing off later.

The 17-year-old Hingis was simmering after the drawn-out win over Kournikova, her fourth over Kournikova with the loss of just one set in a series which began at the French Open in 1997.

"I don't know whether to laugh or cry," said Hingis. "I won the match and I'm in the semi-finals. It's better not to talk about it."

But the top seed known to occasionally display a temper added: "I'm mad about it. I could have cracked the racket after the match."

"It's tough against Anna. It's not the first time she's almost come back from 5-1 down."

In the day's showcase struggle of sisters, Venus Williams stopped younger sibling Serena 6-4, 6-2 to move ahead into a semi-final Saturday against fifth seed Arantxa Sanchez-Vicario.

The Spaniard wore down American Lisa Raymond, seeded 15th, 6-7 (6/8), 6-1, 6-2.

"I'm feeling good, I'm ready to play Venus for the second time this year," said the Spaniard, who beat Williams for the title at Sydney in January. "I know how she plays. I'll just concentrate on my match."

"I'm not surprised that the Williams are playing well on clay. They have the talent to play on all surfaces."

The all-teenage bout between the American

Williams pair quickly turned into a battle from the baseline, with each trying to out-slug the other.

The pair's only other meeting in a tournament occurred in Australia, where Venus also prevailed.

Hingis said that at least she did not have to work out after her lengthy match with Kournikova. "I finished, but it was 30 minutes longer than I should have been out there."

Women athletes, spectators break records in Qatar

DUBAI (AFP) — Victorious female athletes graced the front pages of the official Qatari press Friday after the conservative Gulf emirate hosted its first major sporting event with women athletes and spectators.

Fifty international women champions competed in the track and field Grand Prix before 35,000 spectators of both sexes and in the presence of Qatar's Crown Prince, Sheikh Jasssem Ben Hamad Al Khalifa, Thursday.

Female athletes have rarely competed in Qatar and never before in a major sporting event here. In addition, the grand prix, the second hosted by Doha, was the first that Qatari women were allowed to attend in their home country.

"Our society is conservative but it is affected by changes in the world," Qatari Athletic Federation chief Dahlan Al Hamad said.

"However, we insist that the participants wear decent attire," he said. The athletes were clad in outfits that went down to their knees or mid-thighs.

The changes occurred only days after the ruling emir's wife, Sheikha Muzah Al Mubarak, demanded a political role for women in conservative Gulf monarchies.

"The participation of women in political life is not a subject for debate. It's a legitimate right," the wife of Sheikh Hamad Ben Khalifa Al Thani told the London-based Arabic newspaper Al Hayat.

Women were given access to the grand prix "thanks to the emir and his wife," University of Qatar psychologist Muzah Al Malki said.

"I'm happy that women participated in this competition," she said, adding, "I hope that this participation will open the way for Qatari women to represent Qatar on the international sporting scene."

International Athletics Association chief Primo Nebiolo thanked Qatar for "allowing women to participate in this competition."

And the 1984 Olympic 400 meter gold medalist Nawal El Moutawakel of Morocco described the decision allowing women spectators to attend the event as "historic."

Moutawakel, the first Arab woman to win an Olympic gold, said: "I can't stress how important this is to the development of women's sport in the Gulf region."

"It is a historic moment for the IAAF (International Amateur Athletics Federation) and we must praise the efforts of the Qatar Athletics Federation," she said.

Women's sports are banned in the Gulf monarchies of Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and Kuwait.

The exceptions are rare women's competitions in chess and table tennis in Bahrain and the United Arab Emirates, but not championships.

However, in neighbouring Iran, another conservative Muslim state, women have succeeded in tearing down some barriers and have already participated in championships organized in Asian countries.

But in Iran, the daughter of former president Akbar Hashemi Rafsanjani, Faezeh Hashemi, has championed women's sports.

G-8 ministers press for Israeli 'yes answer' to U.S. invitation

LONDON (AFP) — Foreign ministers from leading industrial nations said Saturday they hoped that Middle East peace talks in Washington next week would go ahead despite problems over Israeli participation.

"We all expressed our concern but we hope that these talks will take place on the basis of the U.S. proposals," British Foreign Secretary Robin Cook told a news conference.

The foreign ministers were meeting here to prepare the groundwork for next week's G-8 conference in Birmingham, central England, of the world's leading industrialised nations.

The United States was pressing ahead with plans for a Washington peace summit despite Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's refusal to make concessions ahead of the Monday meeting.

Aziz snubs Israeli journalists, raises colleagues' hackles

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Was it the questions — or the questioners? Iraq's deputy prime minister refused to acknowledge two Israeli journalists attending the yearly Atlanta gathering of contributors to Cable News Network's (CNN) World Report on Friday — raising hackles among other reporters at what is otherwise a journalistic lovefest.

Mr. Hansen chided. "Mr. Aziz knew he could face questions from Israelis," said CNN spokeswoman, Lori Konopka — and Mr. Hansen's gallantry was no surprise. "Let me use the historic opportunity to speak as an Israeli journalist to a leading Iraqi politician," Ms. Hoffman preceded her question. The live broadcast was fed into U.N. headquarters in New York.

"Let me use the historic opportunity to speak as an Israeli journalist to a leading Iraqi politician," Ms. Hoffman preceded her question. The live broadcast was fed into U.N. headquarters in New York.

In each case, Tariq Aziz, speaking from Baghdad via satellite hook-up, said he didn't like the question — but made a point of not addressing the questioner. Officials from Arab countries not recognising Israel often pointedly ignore Israeli reporters.

Tatiana Hoffman, a reporter with Israel's Channel Two television, asked Mr. Aziz whether Iraq would attack Israel with non-conventional weapons in case of another Gulf crisis.

Mr. Aziz refused to comment — and to address the journalist directly. That prompted an angry journalist from the Norwegian Broadcasting Corporation, Bjorn Hansen, to ask, "In all respect, if I repeat that question would you answer it please?" Other journalists applauded.

"Further 13 per cent of the West Bank in order to advance negotiations with Palestinians," "Tell me, what is your judgement on that?" Mr. Aziz asked Mr. Hansen.

Ms. Hoffman wanted to know: Was it the question or the fact she was Israeli? Mr. Aziz didn't respond. When Ms. Arraf posed the question, Mr. Aziz said he preferred to answer questions dealing only with the U.N. Security Council and U.N.

Sudan says rebels 'evasive'

KHARTOUM (AFP) — The Sudanese government has criticised the southern rebel movement with which it says it made progress in three days of talks last week, but said efforts were underway to improve relations with the rebel's key backers.

Foreign Minister Mustafu Osman Ismail said statements made by the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA) on the outcome of last week's talks in Nairobi were "contradictory" and "evasive."

The talks between a Khartoum government delegation and a delegation from the SPLA ended Wednesday with an agreement to hold a referendum on "unity or outright secession" for the south of the country.

For the government side, the agreement effectively resolved the 15-year-old civil war between the largely Christian and animist south against the Arabised Islamic north.

But the two sides set no date for the referendum, failed to agree on the area of the south to be covered by the poll, and reached no accord on the separation of religion and state.

And the SPLA's spokesman in Cairo, Yasser Arman, last week branded the talks a failure, saying the Khartoum government had failed to offer anything new.

"This round is a failure and not a success," Mr. Arman told AFP in the Egyptian capital.

The Sudanese government is eager to bring to an end the civil war which has left more than a million dead since it began in 1983. War-related famine now threatens the lives of hundreds of thousands.

The SPLA, during the talks, turned down a government offer of a ceasefire, saying it should not be linked to humanitarian assistance for those facing the famine threat.

"The movement dodges and insists that no agreement has been reached, although this was indicated in the closing communiqué," Mr. Ismail said Friday, reported by the official Al Jumhuria newspaper.

The minister said it was advantage of good weather condition, the latest offensive is described as the biggest since the rebels began fighting for autonomy in 1984.

Italian man blows $600,000 on prostitutes

ROME (R) — An Italian businessman spent some $600,000 on prostitutes in two years, said police detectives who unveiled a high-class prostitution racket operating in Rome. The unidentified man was questioned by detectives as part of an investigation into the racket, which enticed housewives and students into its ranks and which had wealthy clients. Based on the prices and the frequency with which he used prostitutes, we calculate he spent more than a billion lire over a two-year period, said Massimiliano Di Bernardini, the detective who headed the operation.

Brazil police catch burglar with his trousers down

BRASILIA (R) — Brazilian police captured a burglar with his trousers down after he got stuck, half-naked, in an iron grille as he tried to break into a house. Globo Television showed Marco Aurelio Santos, sporting only a pair of white underpants, waiting for firemen to cut him free from the metal bars gripping him around his waist. I woke up at seven and was having breakfast when I looked up and there was this guy, stuck, said the house's owner, Eduardo Rocha. I looked and looked again, saw my sound system and called the police immediately. Santos had to tolerate the laughter of onlookers as he awaited rescue, and was not in a talkative mood. "Please, leave me alone, I'm already in trouble," he told a Globo reporter. He was charged with breaking and entering, Globo said.
